After eating the good part of a firm, not overripe water melon, pare off all the green rind and the soft part. Cut into convenient pieces the remaining white part; cover completely with cold water into which you have put two ounces of alum. Let this stand twenty-four to thirty-six hours; then examine each piece to see that none of the green or spongy part remains. Cut into fancy shapes, as crescents, stars, or, like small pickles; put into preserving Lettle and to each seven pounds of melon take three pounds light brown sugar, three pints cider vinegar, half pound meded or applied before the pleats are laid and will broken to hits, one ounce whole cloves, two ounces preserved ginger broken into bits, one red pepper shredded fine; boll Wear a large all-enveloping veil by all slowly till the melon is as clear as amber and can be pierced with a silver fork.
