the justice of statesmanship, which would reform by conservation, take the place of the action of the politician, who thinks he has reformed when he has destroyed. Wrongs always exist in every phase of human society. Evils creep into the church, corruption creeps into politicia, abuses creep into business. These things must be corrected, They always have been corrected, and we sometimes wonder whether the correction was not frequently more costly than the crime. A dishonest trustee should be treated as a criminal. A deliberate looter of a railroad ought to be in the penitentiary. The man who makes a great industrial combination and by means of doctored statements unloads watered stock on a poorly-informed public, putting the proceeds in his own pocket, is the modern type of highwayman, and ought to be ireated as such. But what shall we say of the political leader who takes advantage of incidents of this kind to fashion a cuntiling appeal to all the baser passions of the human heart? What shall we say of the organ of public opinion which deliberately misstates facts, garbles testimony, destroys reputations, and cultivates suspicion and hate which always lie near to the surface of human feeling and deliberately misstates facts, garbles testimony, destroys reputations, and cultivates suspicion and hate which always lie near to the surface of human feeling and deliberately hings in a social tempost, in order to sell its warras? What shall we say of the great haspaxino, which, professing to put before the world a dispassionate review of life incornace and life insurance companies, refuses to see responsible life insurance men, appacently from fear that the truth in passession might deprive its article of certain spassional features.
