Banquet to Be Held at Home Hotel—The silver anniversary of the organization of Grant post Grand Army of the Republic will be held at Home hotel during the week ending October 2. Extra cars will be run to the limit of the ability of the company, but the crowds are so vast on these occasions that the company asks all who can get to early start. Action on Northwest Boulevard—Final action of the council in the matter of the new Northwest boulevard is expected by the Board of Park Commissioners Tuesday night, and when the board meets Wednesday it may be in position to take further action looking to entirely new negotiations for a boulevard in the northwest, part of town along the lines laid down in the present project, but changed so as to reduce the cost. It may be necessary to increase the number of stands, as there is material on hand and room just west of the central stand for another of similar size. Appeals From Decision of County—William Powers, a farmer living in the western part of the county, has appealed to the district court from the action of the county board disallowing his claim for $600 for damage done his property by a change in the course of the Elkhorn river. He asserts the county did not carry out an agreement to build a cut-off ditch above his place. The commissioners asserted he was responsible for the change in the course of the river by putting in a cut-off ditch of his own and refused to allow him any damages. Mrs. Ziebell, he says, has refused to live with him, or to furnish him meals unless he paid for them. As he is providing the home he decides it is unjust to force him to pay board too. He says his four sons join with their mother against him, making life miserable for him. He is 52 years old and says he has worked as a foundry moulder for forty-five years. BROWER E. M'CGAGUE—HERO Omaha Man Endears Himself to Many Nannies by Saving Babies on Train. How heroically Brower E. McCague worked to save nineteen babies from a wreck at St. Louis Friday night may never be known by these infants: he was too modest to give his name. He found King Ak-Sar-Ben XIII standing by a window, a long purple robe trimmed with richest ermine on his broad shoulders. When the presence of his lord high chamberlain was made known the king turned. He was now not the usual merry monarch, gentle of voice and considerate of bearing. His voice rang anger as he spoke to Samson, who knelt before him. "How now," exclaimed the king. "What base varlet hath presumed upon my royal disposition, which is known to be mild and kindly, to bring these clouds and rains during this, our festival week? What is the name of the keeper of the royal barometer, the royal rain gauge and the royal thermometer? By mine order he shall not escape our royal displeasure." And His Name is Welsh. "Your majesty," said Samson, "the name of the forecaster of the weather is Welsh and he bears the honorable title of colonel. Moreover, he is employed by the great government of the United States. Therefore it is fitting that we beware what punishment is visited upon him." "I care not," stormed the king. "Summon the varlet before me." Samson thereupon departed and sent a guard of six halberds to bring Colonel Welsh into the royal presence. They returned shortly with the unhappy man bound between them. The king cast upon him a glance of contempt and then motioned the guards to remove the ropes which bound him. He pointed a stern forefinger at the window where the rain was beating. "Speak, fellow," he said. "Thou art the royal purveyor of weather. Why hast thou brought us such an article on this our festival week?" "May it please your majesty," said the unhappy weather prophet, "the area of high pressure has moved northeast, accompanied by a low barometer in the region of the middle states and the lake region. High north by northeasterly winds prevail in the mountain region, accompanied by killing frosts in northern Montana and northeastern Iowa. Precipitation is reported from the gulf states, varying from—" What Prates the Fellow Off? The king held up his hand and made a gesture of impatience. "What prates the fellow off?" he asked of Samson, who stood by his right hand. Samson spoke a few words to Colonel Welsh, telling him it was to his best interest that he answer the king's question directly and that only thus could he hope to escape condign punishment. "Speak, knave," said the king again. "Why hast thou brought this weather upon us?" The tone of the king, who is naturally a good hearted monarch, was more kindly and the weather man plucking up courage answered boldly: "The farmers in the great corn belt over which your majesty is ruler have need of the rain else how should they raise the corn, which is the foundation of the wealth of the people?" If Colonel Welsh thought he had scored a point he was mistaken. "Wretch," said the king. "Knowest thou not that the corn is all ready for the shuckers? And pratest thou of rain for the corn's sake? Knowest thou not all that these, our brave warriors who till the soil, desire to come to our great festival, which we have prepared for them this week?" Poor Prophet is Downcast. The weather prophet was mumbling something about "area of high pressure," when the king arose from the throne. "Area me no areas of high pressure," he exclaimed. "We know this is all thine own plotting. Such weather as is not written in the books. Bring hither the prophecies of Ira R. Hicks." As the last words were spoken the weather prophet turned pale. For a moment he gazed with unseeing eyes and then fell sprawling on the lower steps of the throne. "Great king," he cried, "Spare me this humiliation. Quote not to me from this Hicks, who is but a sorry prophet and knows naught of the weather art. Spare me this and I will do all I can to repair my grievous fault." King Ak-Sar-Ben XIII, who is famed in all parts of the world for his generosity, was touched and ordered the book returned without reading from it. "Arise, Sir Knight Welsh," he said. "And hear what we have to say to thee. It is my royal pleasure that if thou dost clear away these clouds and bring the sun to shine for a period of at least six days so that all our subjects may come to our capital city and enjoy the fruits of their labors, thou shalt be again restored to our royal favor and made again an honored knight of our court. On the other hand, if thou still persistest thy evil course it is our royal command that thou shalt be prohibited from seeing our electric pageant and our carnival, not only this year but for a period of seven years. We have spoken." "Gracious king, I will surely do as thou wishest," exclaimed Colonel Welsh as he arose. He kissed the hem of the royal garment and then bowed himself to the door. WELSH HALED BEFORE KING Weather Prophet is Sternly Rebuked by Ak-Sar-Ben. RAIN IS CAUSE OF CHASTISEMENT Only When His Majesty Calls for Books of Ira R. Hicks Does the Official Forecaster Weaken. Samson was scroached out of bed Monday morning, when a summons was brought to him from the king. Hastily putting on his red tights, his green trunks and his red corset and hanging his sword by his side, he walked rapidly to the royal apartment wondering what could have occasioned this early message. He found King Ak-Sar-Ben XIII standing by a window, a long purple robe trimmed with richest ermine on his broad shoulders. When the presence of his lord high chamberlain was made known the king turned. He was now not the usual merry monarch, gentle of voice and considerate of bearing. NEW CONTRACTOR IS LOW South Omaha Bridge Company Plays Havoc with the Older Concerns. A new bridge contractor played havoc with the old firms that have been doing the county bridge work for several years, Monday morning when bids were opened by the county board. The new firm is the South Omaha Artificial Stone company and its bid on east 100th street over $100 lower than that of its nearest competitor. The board recently proposed to construct a permanent concrete bridge across the Pappo near Bennington to be 130 feet long and another one 100 feet long on Dodge street near Lane station. The use of concrete county bridges is an innovation and bids were asked for to find out how the cost would compare with the usual wooden or part steel temporary structures. The bid of the South Omaha company on the Bennington bridge was $5,300. The other bids were as follows: Western Construction company, $7,900; Canton Bridge company, $7,600; Standard Bridge company, $7,600. On the Dodge street structure the South Omaha company bid $3,750. The other bids were: Western Construction company, $4,600; Canton Bridge company, $4,700; Standard Bridge company, $4,600. The other bidders may make a fight on the South Omaha bid because it was four minutes late in being filed. The bids were to close at 12 o'clock Monday and this bid came in at 12:04. The clerk declared it was presented before 12 o'clock, but he did not place his filing stamp on it until after that hour. The board overruled the protest. Samuel Katz was the low bidder for the grading of the proposed road across the Burlington tracks on what is known as the Bauman road near Seymour lake. His bid was $7 cents per yard. The board several weeks ago decided to put the road across the Burlington track at grade, but the road went into court to enjoin it. A compromise has since been reached by which the county will put the road under the tracks, the railroad to put in the necessary concrete piers. BIG HARVEST, FEW LABORERS Quarter Million Men Wanted and Sixty-Seven Plead Poverty. RECORD OF POLICE COURT With Washington Begging for Work—Many Men Pretending to Seek Employment. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. With work waiting for 250,000 persons according to a Washington dispatch, the police of Omaha arrested sixty-seven men and women between Saturday evening and Monday morning and when they appeared in police court Monday, some forty of them entered the plea that they were hunting for work. "With a quarter of a million jobs vacant, it's wonderful how lucky some people are to do odd work," said Judge Bryce Crawford as he stretched a uniform fine of $5 and costs to those who had the money, and gave ten days to others. Men were present in police court who had walked from South Dakota, where they claimed there was no work, to secure

Jobs in the packing houses of South Omaha; others came through Sioux City, which has packing houses, advertising for help, to the packing houses of Omaha, some said they hunted North Dakota and Wyoming over to secure work on the new railroads, but the railroads had more than they wanted. Strong men stood before the police magistrate and said they were "thunkies" and dishwashers in cheap lodging houses, because they could secure nothing else to do; while weak little men who were supported by the court officer as they stood before the bar, were looking for work as teamsters or special policemen. Actual conditions do not bear out the plea of the forty-seven varieties, who appeared in police court Monday. Every labor bureau and employment agency in the city advertises for men to ship to the Dakotas for railroad work; almost every farmer in South Dakota wants help and is willing to pay big money; packing houses never have enough competent men, according to foremen. And when Judge Crawford learned a quarter of a million of workers were wanted, he decided not to let any of them get away from Omaha until the confetti was swept from the pavements. These drizzling rains prevail all over the state, and it is raining all through the Missouri valley east to the Mississippi. The prospects for Monday night and Tuesday are a continuance of the rainy conditions with no particular change in temperature in this locality. The rain of Monday was general all over the state and as far west as Cheyenne, putting the ground in excellent condition for fall plowing. Wheat threshing is over in Wyoming and considerable is already moving to market, the yield and quality being fair.
