At the front of the float stood Mercury's staff symbolic of industrial progress. There, too, sat the goddess of plenty, pouring good things from a cornucopia. At her foot lay great wheels, representative of the mechanical world. A large transparency, showed the strong arm with hammer in hand. Along the side of the float was the illuminated motto, "Labor Omnia Vincit."

ing fork in hand. At the turkey's side stood another cook, while in front of the bird a woman with sleeves rolled up with busily preparing the Thanksgiving meal. At the back end of the float a football player fully accoutered for the battle float sat colonial soldlers, their muskets kicked a pigskin off into the crowd. A long elastic served to bring the football back to the kicker.

Christmas Day.

Santa Claus in his sleigh was pictured just driving down from the roof of a house, his reindeers moving rythmically and gracefully over billows of blue clouds. In front was a large Christmas tree decorated with all kinds of toys. This revolved as the float moved. A glimpse was also afforded at the scene within the louse before the fireplace where little children were joyously examining the contents of the stockings which the good Saint Nicholas has just filled. "Watt Till the Sun Shines, Nellie."

Beginning with the eleventh float the opular songs were shown. Nellie was seated here on a dias in the midst of the picture, while before her a plumed knight sang his song. In the front of the float Jupiter Pluvius was seated on the summit of a thick billow of clouds. In one hand he bore his tripod and in the other an umbrella. Water gushed down over the clouds from an overturned vessel. At the rear of the picture a frog ascended a ladder from an immelise globe. The frog punkins, fruits and other good things is the recognized weather prophet in pouring out o fthe horn of plenty. Behind the turkey on a raised dias stood a ture of fish and dragons spouting water flowers, typical of clear weather and "Everybody Works But Father."

Here was a scene of activity in the midst of which father who has become so famous by his idleness appeared doubly inactive. Out in the yard "mother" and "Sister Ann" were doing the washing; a young man, pick on shoulder and cliner pail in hand, was about to go to his work; a hen was sitting on a nest; the bees were working at their hives; the cat was busily catching a large rat which looked from under the house; the very stoye at which poor father was working as shown by its red hot side and the tea kettle on top of it was busily steaming. But there sat the disreputable father, his "feet in front of the fire smoking his pipe of clay," and reading the newspaper. The poor man even wore blinders in his effort to keep from the were sight of

"Under Southern' Skies." A gigantie slice of watermellon looking red and luscious with the light behind it, formed the setting for this picture. In the crescent formed by it stood a much patched darkey cabin in front of which sat a fat "mammy" and a thin "daddy." young scion of the house perched on a log played the banjo while a young man and woman did a cakewalk. On the trees at the rear of the cabin the 'possums and the 'coons held vigil while from a dark cavern an alligator looked forth. "In the Good Old Summer Time." All the good things of summer were shown here. A young man and woman who, to judge by their actions, were each a boat. They had fishing tackle, but apparently paid no attention to the fish, tree and smoking a pipe, drew sweet and filehed from the pockets of their victims lastical arithmetic." soothing pastoral tones from an accordion. through the postoffice boxes. A bull dog, chained by his kennel, wore his muzzle in full compliance with the King's Highway a night or two ago can edict of Mayor Dahlman. "Down on the Farm."

This was a scene of rural happiness, such boxes in the down town district near the as is depicted by the song. A rooster stood carnival grounds and has been recovered on the fence, a hog lay under the hay- and is now at the postoffice awaiting the stack, a sheep reclined at the foot of a claimant. shock of wheat, a donkey looked from a window of the barn. A woman was milking a life-size cow, and from time to time she squirted a thin white stream into the postoffice and inquiring of the assistant members as follows: J. A. Kuhn, L. T. the crowd. Another woman was churning on the porch of the farm house and the ramer himself was contentedly smoking in a shady corner and whittling a stick.

"Robinson Crusoe's late." At the door of his but the famous castaway was seated, his gun between his knees and his parrot on his hand. A dog lay at his feet and one of his tamed animals stood in the yard. Back of the hut, in the jungle, three naked cannibals were scated around a boiling pot, about which as well as on the persons of the savages were articles which gave good reason to believe that the unhappy meat bone in action Fred Mets and Walter Jardine, two their stew was a white man. In the palm trees overhead monkeys leaped nimbly from limb to limb.

"Cheer Up, Mary."

Mary was discivered at a second story window of her home while her sailor lover was climbing up a ladder to this window just out of reach of twa feroclous bull dogs straining the chains which bound them to their kennel A man. evidently Mary's father, appeared at a window just around the corner of the house wit ha shotgun in his hand. A woman carrying a candle was looking out of the door on the first floor to see what the commotion was about. But in spite of all this "there's a rainbow in the sky" and the clouds are rolling away. The picture of a bleeding heart on the side of the float was flanked on either side by a chiming wedding bell.

"Watting at the Church." Through the window of the church the organist was seen seated before his instrument. From time to time the wedding bells sounded from the tower. the door was the bride in her wedding finery. There she was walting at the church, waiting at the church, waiting at the church when she found he'd left her in the lurch. (Law, how it did upset her.) All at once he sent her 'round a note, here's the very note, this is what he wrote, "Can't get away to marry you today; my wife won't let me." young woman was reading the very note and weeping while behind a curtain at the front of the float the man was struggling with his wife who certainly "wouldn't

If the Man in the Moon Was a Coon A colored gentleman on a ladder was discovered in this picture reaching into a chicken house and handing pullets, out to a brother who deposited them in a bag. The man in the moon looked on at the clandestine raid. This was the most mechanical of all the floats. Within it was a gasoline engine of five horsepower which worked an airpump and from time to time the man in the moon spewed opt great mouthfulls of confettle upon the spectators. At times the current of air was directed into another channel and

A warm welcome had been given the visiting churchmen. The business section of he city is decorated with flags and bunting and by night is brilliant with an electrical display. The bishop of London, who reached here vesterday and went to the residence of Bishop Gibson of the diocese of Virginia, spent the entire afternoon on the golf links, where he made many friends, With rare good nature he posed for a number of pictures for amateurs and some for publication. In his public statements the bishop referred to the fact that for a century and a half the church in the United States was under the bishop of London. He declared that he valued this historical connection and it was because of it he came to America.

Prominent Lay Delegates Lay delegates to the convention number many well-known business men from every section of the country and several of them have taken houses for the three weeks' sessions. Notable among these is J. Pierpont Morgan, who occupies the Rutherford nansion, which he refitted throughout with furnishings and provisions sent from New York. At this mansion there will be a number of entertainments. There are about 800 members of the general convention, including the bishops of the several dieceses and missionary districts, and four clerical and four lay deputies from each of the dioceses and one each from every mission-
