HOW SOON WE ARE FORGOTTEN

Rise and Fall of the Author of the War Cry, "The Chinese Must Go."

STRENUOUS LIFE OF DENNIS KEARNEY

An Agitator that Shaped the Policies of State and Nation—How it Started, Developed and Declined.

A striking illustration of the speed with which the turmoil of yesterday is overshadowed by the activities of today is afforded by the announcement of the death of the noted anti-Chinese agitator, Dennis Kearney. A quarter of a century ago, while at the zenith of his notoriety or fame, he was featured by the press from Golden Gate to Cape Cod. Millions heard or read of the sandlot orator of San Francisco. Working people of the Pacific coast hailed him as a savior. His dictum was law to thousands. San Francisco reared municipal laws at his bidding. His influence dominated the revision of the constitution of California, extended to the halls of congress and culminated in the passage of the Chinese exclusion act. From Kearney's curt, uncompromising war cry, "The Chinese must go," uttered on the sandlots thirty years ago, sprang the fire of Monrovia antipathy which the passing years failed to quench. Yet the author of the war cry heard from sea to sea and fashioned into law, vanished from the center of the public stage as quickly as he had risen, and less than a dozen lines sufficed to chronicle his passing "over the range." "With might his spirit, if cognizant of

Here every sabbath Kearney, dressed in workingman's garb, usually in his shirt sleeves, addressed his audiences, who went away lighter of heart and comforted by his words.

Despite the somewhat rapid style of speech of Kearney and the other orators the people were orderly and well behaved. The meetings were known as the "sand lot" meetings and have passed into history as such. In September, 1878, a constitutional convention was called in California. It sat for 136 working days and made many changes in the original instrument, most of them the direct result of Kearney's agitation. And so strong was Kearney and Kearneyism in the state that the new constitution was adopted by a majority of 10,000 out of a total vote cast of 145,000. It went into operation July 4, 1879, an evidence or what one strong man could accomplish.

A Boston Speech. Kearney made three tours of the east, in 1878, 1881 and 1888 and boosted the anti-Chinese propaganda in all the large cities. On one of these tours he delivered an address in Faneuil hall, Boston, to an audience of 5,000. An extract from this speech follows: "The capitalistic thief and land pirate of California, instead of employing the poor white men of that beautiful golden state, sent across to Asia, the oldest despotism on earth, and there contracted with a band of leprous Chinese pirates, brought them to California and now uses them as a knife to cut the throats of the honest laboring men of that state." In a more hopeful and prophetic vein he says: "I walk the earth at midday and I find the vast expanse of the blue of heaven unrelieved by the sparkle of a single star, and yet I know that Mars still holds his course, that Venus still whirls through space, that Jupiter and Uranus are still flashing in the fields of light, that the blazing belt of Orion and the bright gleam of the North star are all there, and when the centrifugal force of nature wheels us into the presence of night we behold our companion worlds traveling in shining splendor on their eternal rounds, and thus it is with a movement of this kind. We know the workmen are there; we know they are as true as the stars in their views, and will, when called upon, exhibit themselves in beauty, in majesty and in power."

And again: "Bring the glad tidings from your brothers of the Pacific slope that we left the plains of California strewn with the festering carcasses of the political plunderers. * * * Friends, I have been misrepresented. Press association news gatherers, working in the interest of unscrupulous thieves, have distorted my sayings in their insane and hellish attempt to fasten on a free people the shackles of a slavery worse than death." Ambassador Bryce's View. In the American Commonwealth James Bryce devotes an entire chapter to "Kearneyism in California," discussing it as a political factor. Of Kearney he says: "He was a drayman by trade, Irish by birth, brought up a Roman Catholic, but accustomed to include his religion among the established institutions he reviled. He had borne a good character for industry and steadiness until some friend 'put him into stocks' and the loss of what he hoped to gain is said to have turned him to agitation. He had gained some facility in speaking by practice at a Sunday debating club called the Lyceum of Self Culture. A self-cultivating broom sounds as harmless as a social science congress, but there are times when even mutual improvement societies may be dangerous. Kearney's tongue, loud and abusive, soon gathered an audience. On the west side of San Francisco, say you cross the peninsula from the harbor toward the ocean, there is (or there was) a large open space, laid out for building, but not yet built on, covered with sand and hence called the Sand Lot. Here the mob had been wont to gather for meetings; here Kearney formed his party. At first he had merely vagabonds to listen, but one of the two great newspapers took him up. These two, the Chronicle and the Morning Call, were in keen rivalry and the former, seeing in this new movement a chance of going ahead, filled its columns with sensational matter and increasing its sale among workingmen, went in hot and strong for the Sand Lot party. One of its reporters is credited, with having dressed up one of Kearney's speeches into something approaching literary form, for the orator was an ignorant man, with no ideas beyond those he gathered from the daily press. The advertisement which the Chronicle gave him by its reports and articles, and which he repaid by advising working men to take it, soon made him a personage, and his position was finally assured by his being, along with several other speakers, arrested and prosecuted on a charge of riot, in respect of inflammatory speeches delivered at a meeting on the top of Nob hill, one of the steep heights which make San Francisco the most picturesque of American cities. The prosecution failed and Kearney was a popular hero. Clerks and the better class citizens now began to attend his meetings. * * * The Morning Call had now followed the Chronicle, trying to outbid it for the support of the working men. There was nothing positive, nothing constructive or practical either in these trades or in the program of the party, but on open-air crowd is not critical, and gives the loudest cheers to the strongest. Kearney had no plans beyond keeping his party going, but he was self-confident, domineering, and not without practical shrewdness. At any rate, he knew how to push himself to the front, and win the reputation of rugged honesty—he always dressed as a working man and ran for no office—and while denouncing politicians as thieves and capitalists as blood-suckers, while threatening fire and the halter if the demands of the people were not granted, he tried to avoid direct breaches of the law. * * * Kearney thrived because the solid classes despised him, and felt that the best thing was to let him talk himself out and reveal his own hollowness. The movement fell as quickly as it rose."

SAFEGUARD CHILDREN'S EYES

Shiny Paper of School Books Set to Have an Injurious Effect. The question of giving free eyeglasses to the pupils of the New York public schools who need them and have them not is one which is dividing the camps of educating and philanthropists in the metropolis. The superintendent of these schools is very urgent that such a policy shall be adopted, and he has some strong supporters in educational circles, among them the New York School Journal, which in its current issue takes up the subject vigorously in behalf of the proposal. It decries the "there are fundamental principles involved in the question. It is the duty of the common school to strive to equalize as much as possible the educational opportunities of the children. The school seeks to correct the evils and inequalities which society has developed so far as it lies in its power." A paper by Dr. Louis Bell of Boston, read before the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, giving the results of investigation into the effect of light upon the eyes, suggests the better way of removing a prolific source of eye trouble, namely, the calendered paper in school books. Dr. Bell says he visited many counting rooms to experiment upon the illumination in them and in those where the very shiny paper was used for the books he seldom found the clerks free from eye trouble. And this led to another and very serious question. There can be no doubt about it, that the books with shiny paper which are put into the hands of the school children of today are quickly and certainly helping ruin their eyes. The growth of the photographic processes has been so great and the results so important for illustrating and so inexpensive that our children are now taught from picture books. But these pictures which are so beautiful and which have such educational value can be printed inexpensively only on shining paper which has a glazed surface suitable to receive them. The shiny surface injures the eye. It was a bold stand, that taken by two recent Boston authors of a textbook on hygiene, when they argued that a book treating of and teaching this subject should not itself violate a most important rule of health. So they insisted that the volume be printed on dull paper. The publishers protested, for they are in competition with others, and dared to issue a book which would lack the attractiveness of the photographic reproductions, but the sturdy authors carried the day. It was a step in the right direction.—Boston Transcript.
