THE HAT AS WORN IN PARIS One's Dog, One's Size and Other Things Must Be Taken Into Account.

The hat, as it is worn in Paris-that is the thing that interests the American woman, writes a Paris correspandent. Hardly ever have the hats here been more ridiculous-at least, in the way they are orn. The more eccentric a hat is, the better, and specimens one would have to be paid to wear under ordinary circumstances suddenly acquire the greatest atractive power.

This evidently happens to hundreds of Americans in Paris. Americans have a neat tailor-made style of their own, and as long as they stick to that, they always look bemingly and appropriately dressed But then they come to Paris.

The American goes to the Rue de la Prix and orders a hat. The most exaggerated are shown her. She picks out what she judges to be the most Parislan, and pays a mere bagatelle for it—only $00 or 500 francs. That hat is, however, not distinctly Parisian. It might perhaps appear to be, if worn by a Frenchwoman, but on the head of a wealthy New England woman the effort is sadly amusing.

One sees enormous hats on small women, and small hats on tall women. This year it is more fashionable to wear the part of the brim begins about in the of the crown, as well as a wide brim, and perhaps several feathers, dangle off to the Dogs, too, are fashionable, and, strange to say, there must be a certain proportion between hats and dogs. A small dog har onizes with a big hat-it is evidently distinetly bad form to have large headgear and a big dog.

There is the hat with eyes. That is he one with the two big hatpins. These yes are sometimes very pretty-soft black on mourning hats, or a nice shade of brown with a becoming straw. When, however. Pockets in the Skirt. The princess of Wales, who gives so many orders to London firms, has one idiosyncrasy that must be obeyed. She heartily disapproves (so the Reader informs us) of the non-pocket tyranny meted out by some dressmakers to their customers and will not tolerate the placing of pockets at the foot of the skirt among the ruffles beneath it, says Woman's Life. For her royal highness pockets are always provided in the seam that appears upon the left of the front breadth of the skirt, a position that rather arbitrarily dictates a similarity in skirt trimming, especially when muslin frocks are being made.
