Greater Omaha---The Market Town.

Every development of recent years has shown an increasingly firm grasp by the West upon the commercial and business supremacy of the country. The West produces the crops, upon which most of the prosperity of the country is based. The railroads are finding their greatest expansion in the West. Western banks are showing heavier deposits and holding more money than ever before. Western farmers are the most prosperons citizens of the nation today and Western merchants are the biggest purchasers and the most prompt payers of the jobbers, manufacturers and importers. The West, instead of being, as in the old days, a chronic borrower, now has a bank account of its own and is experiencing a degree of prosperity never before equalled. Current reports of Dun's and Bradstreet's show that the number of commercial failures in the West for the six months ending with June 30 is the smallest in history and much less than that of any other section of a most favored nation, while the amount of the liabilities is almost insignificant.

In view of all its advantages of location, railway facilities, nearby population and all round development as a business, manufacturing, professional and residential center, Omaha is becoming-and should more rapidly become-the recognized capital of this section of the West, the commercial metropolis of the most productive and fertile territory of the nation, The field Omaha offers to the manufacturer, the business and professional man is much greater and more filled with advantages than that of any other city in the prosperous West. Within a radius of sixty miles is a market of fully 500,000 consumers, all with means to buy according to their needs, while the twenty-six lines of railroads radiating from the city open up every state between the Mississippi and the Pacific to the commercial invasion of the Omaha jobbers and manu-success depends only on the energy of the business men in pressing the advantage already secured. The work of disseminating the many advantages of Omaha should be vigorously pushed along carefully organized, wise and judicious lines, to the end that Omaha may secure the increased population, trade and business that naturally belongs here. Much has been accomplished in the last few years. The enlargement of the jobbing district, the development of the retail trade, the growth in manufacturing and other industries, the increased bank clearings, the activity in real estate and home building are all indications of the possibilities in store, with benefit to every citizen, by united effort and whole souled enthusiasm in the plans for building a Greater Omaha-the Market Town.
