Books and Magazines

The east coast of Florida is the scene of Harrison Rhodes' novel, "The Flight to Eden." The story opens at New London, about 1870. Basil Forrester, through tragic experience, comes to feel that his love can only bring sorrow or death to women, and flies to the east coast of Florida. Although he finds an Eve there, this is not the Eden of the title, for he finds there also the means of violent death to men, chivalry and the shadow of London. Published by Henry Holt & Co.

"Thomas Alva Edison; Sixty Years of an Inventor's Life," by Francis Arthur Jones, will at once commend itself as one of the few necessary books to librarians and readers alike. Edison's name and fame are known around the world. His life story reads like a romance, from the time he published a newspaper on board a train at 14 and later was an out-at-the-elbows "tramp" telegraph operator till his electrical inventions caused the formation of a $10,000,000 stock company. It is a life of Edison is in print, a fact which makes this book doubly valuable. It is the result of close acquaintance with and study of the inventor and is at once complete, authoritative and intensely interesting. It is a romance of truth which far exceeds fiction. The book is replete with descriptions of inventions and illustrations. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. is the publisher.

"The Black Bar" is another story of adventure by Louis Joseph Vance, the author of "The Brass Bowl" and other stirring tales. The new volume is a thriller, filled with high dramatic situations, but it is not so much a tax on the credulity as was "The Brass Bowl." Its characters are much more human and real, but the tale is quite as exciting as the reader could desire. It is a tale of mystery, but told with a pleasing directness and with a logical development of the plot. It is published by the Bobbe-Merrill company, Indianapolis.

Isaac N. Stevens, prominent in legal and political affairs in Colorado, is the author of "The Laborators," just published by B. W. Dodge & Co. of New York. It is a story of the development of the country from the times of the civil war to the present, with a keen analysis of changes that have been wrought in the politics and the public sentiment of the country in that time. The author has woven a pretty love story into the tale, without robbing the book of any of its historical value.

"The Supreme Gift," by Grace Litchfield, author of "The Moving Finger Writes," is a novel presenting a dramatic situation that is allied to questions of individual social responsibility, interesting in a great degree. It depicts the meeting of Nancy after another, and with a pathos that grips one sympathies. Joan Kelden, in her passionate pity for the poor, and her endeavor to atone for her father's bankruptcy which has swept away their all, however misguided in the course which she pursues, is a sweet, lovable girl, and the other characters of the story are so fully and skilfully drawn. The illustrations, by Alice Barber Stephens, Little, Brown & Co. is the publisher.

"Quickened," by Anna Chapin Ray, author of "Hearts and Creeds," "Acquroy of the Faculty," "By the Good Sainte Anne," etc., combines a charming description of Quebec surroundings and society with a study of character which goes deeper into human nature than any she has hitherto made. She gives here an admirable sympathetic study of the way Catholicism reaches certain deep-seated needs of the authority may work on an ardent and impressionable mind, once turned towards religious satisfactions. She does this without compromising a sturdy Protestantism of the intellect, and indicates the common ground of the two faiths, both of which are based on human necessities. The heart of the story is in Thorne Alstrom's struggle, and its gradual working out according to an inward necessity, not by outward compulsion. Yet the novel in other respects is well worth reading, has many a picturesque description, as of the pilgrimages, scenes, and has a number of clever characterizations, tender, touching, womanly and brave—and the minor characters are impressively individual and realistic. Published by Little, Brown & Co.

"Cupid's Pack of Cards," by Walter Pullizer, a new book of original epigrams and proverbs on the great international game of love, with fifty-two playing cards, employed separately, as a decorative background, have been approached by a manufacturer of playing cards, with a view to securing the privilege of reproducing them as a practical pack of cards.

"The Hemlock Avenue Mystery," by Roman Doubleday, the mystery attached to the death of a prominent lawyer, an indictment against another member of the bar, based on circumstantial evidence, furnish the theme for this engrossing story. The mystery is eventually solved by a local reporter, the principal character of the novel. The plot is closely knitted and well worked out, the interest is sustained throughout, and although the reader's indignation is kept on edge and increased by surprising situations and events, there is nothing impossible or unnatural, it is one of the few books no one will wish to lay down. Published by Little, Brown & Co.

"Traffic," the Story of a Faithful Woman," by E. Temple Thurston, while introducing a character to whom your sympathies go forth, brings the reader face to face with some of the knotty, searching problems of modern life. Throughout Nanno Troy's life problem is interwoven that question which is today of such absorbing interest, the attitude of the church toward divorce. Published by the G. W. Dillingham company.

"Dr. Ellen," by Juliet Wilbur Thompson, is a vigorous, romantic novel of life and love in the California Sierras. Dr. Ellen is a medical practitioner who, for sufficiently compelling reasons, sacrifices her future to retire to a mountain village. The story of her struggles against adverse conditions and of the man who came into her life will prove of great interest to the reader.

"Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup"
This is the best remedy for all the ailments of children. It is a safe and reliable remedy for all the ailments of children. It is a safe and reliable remedy for all the ailments of children. It is a safe and reliable remedy for all the ailments of children.

CRYSTAL BALL TELLS DREAMS
Eliminated as far as possible is nothing new in history. As Prof. Hyslop discloses in his book on the metaphysical enigmas, this form of divination was known among the Greeks, who possessed polished and enchanted crystals in which future events were signified. He has also found traces of the practices of crystal gazing in Assyria, Greece, Rome, China, Japan, India and possibly in some of the South Sea Islands. The use of a mirror or crystal ball has been noted among the Apaches of the western plains; they employ a crystal to discover stolen property. Other tribes of Indians make their patients gaze into water in which they see pictures of the food and medicine good for them. In Polynesia a hole is dug in the ground and a crystal ball is held in the hand of a child and in the mirror thus formed float weird pictures of spirits and demons.

Interesting Stories of Crystal Gazing.
Most of the stories of wonders accomplished by means of crystal gazing are based on the basis of such testimony that the are regarded by the scientists as interesting, but unreliable. Nor are the modern manifestations held to belong necessarily to the realm of the queer. The point of view of modern psychology is that strange things and visions do come before the mind at times, as a result of concentrated gazing. There is no need of calling them supernatural; they are simply supernormal.

Occasionally an impression made by some circumstance of years before and entirely unremembered by the person, presents an advertisement in a newspaper, seen but not really noticed months before, will drift into consciousness. Prof. Hyslop cites the case of a woman living in Brooklyn who on looking into the crystal frequently had a vision of a bright blue sky, a garden with a wall fence and a peculiar chain pump in the garden. Later she went to her old home which she had not known since she was 2 or 3 years old and there, sure enough, were the chain pump, the wall fence and the bright blue sky.

One of the internationally famous crystal seers is Mrs. Verrill, for sometime a lecturer in the garden of a newspaper, seen but not really noticed months before, will drift into consciousness.
