Grown folk must have it, and therefore the gymnasiums spring up as thick as mushrooms. The children must have it: therefore, when the state has done all that it can for them physically, private associations take them up. Free skaling rinks and toboggan slides-even free toboggans and skates for the skatelass-are provided, less with the end of giving the chlidren joy than of promoting that fetich of the Swedish soul-public health.

Associations for outdoor games take charge of the public playgrounds, organizing so-called pedagogic games that are not only uproaring fun, but develop swiftness, precision and nerve. With government aid, these societies send teachers of games to all the common schools, and the children are turned loose in the open air every day for a short romp. We use these Swedish games in our gymnasiums and in such of the public schools as can command the space. Why not use them out of doors and make them universal? When a Swede has got his body built he does not leave off there. What the club is to an English business man, the symnasium is to the Swede. 'He takes exercise suited to his age to keep in condition; or, if not up to the mark, puts into the nearest gymnasium for repairs. The movement cure and massage-these are his substitutes for drugs. Headaches, liver complaints, nerves, dyspepsia, are all treated, at least partially, by active or passive gymnastics.

Medical gymnastics after the Swedish model are more and more coming into favor with English physicians. But middle aged English people have a lot to learn about the therapeutic value of exercise. It keeps off fatty degeneration; it keeps off age. Look at the Swedes-their clean skins; their fresh color, their freedom from surplus weight. Look at their mortality rate-the lowest in the civilized world!-London News.
