DOGS, DOG DAYS AND RABIES

Popular Beliefs Regarding Dog Bites at Variance with Facts.

FEDERAL SCIENTISTS REPORT

Curative Value of Madstones Declared Fallacious—Muzzling Is Pronounced Best Preventive—Different in Diseases.

Dr. George H. Hart of the bureau of animal industry, Department of Agriculture, in a recent report of the results of investigations conducted by the scientists of the bureau, demolishes some common theories regarding hydrophobia, or rabies; tells how the disease forestalled and gives much instructive information on a subject which causes periodic agitation in communities. Bearing on the controversy provoked by the muzzling order of Omaha's mayor last year is the conclusion of the scientists in favor of muzzling all dogs. The report says, in part: In the category of infectious diseases rabies stands at the head of those about which the ideas of the general public are most at variance with the actual facts. It is commonly believed that a person bitten by a dog in perfect health, is liable to become affected with hydrophobia should the dog develop rabies at any subsequent period, however long afterward. Consequently, believers in this theory are particularly anxious to have the dog killed at once before he has had an opportunity to go mad. Nothing could be more fallacious and at variance with our knowledge of all infectious diseases, and the killing of the dog should always be discouraged. Until recently it was considered that the dog's saliva became virulent only three days before the appearance of symptoms of rabies. According to some recent experiments by Nicholas, it has been found that the saliva may become virulent six or seven days before the symptoms develop. Therefore, in case the animal remains healthy for ten days after it has bitten the person or animal no danger need be apprehended from that bite, even though the dog develop rabies within the next few weeks. Madstone. The curative value of the madstone is still devoutly believed in by a great many people in certain sections of the country. Within the last few years a madstone was forwarded to the department, the owner stating that it had prevented several cases of rabies and he was anxious for it to be tried by the bureau. Some of these madstones, properly called hair balls, are obtained from the stomachs of various wild and domestic animals. They are in some cases composed of matted hair which the animal has licked from its body and swallowed; but in the majority of cases they consist of masses of vegetable fiber, such as the awns of clover and beards of grain, which has gradually collected over a considerable period of time and are formed into a spherical shape by the contraction of the gastric walls. Gallstones, intestinal calculi and in fact any porous stones may be used as madstones. After a person has been bitten, the madstone is applied to the wound, and it is believed that the longer it adheres the more sure it is of preventing the disease. Whether it will stick or not depends entirely on the amount of the hemorrhage or discharge from the wound. Where this is profuse, the blood infiltrates the meshes of the madstone, soon coagulates or dries, and tends to hold it in place, and it adheres for a considerable time under such circumstances. In these cases the virus is supposed to be removed and the treatment is heralded a success. On the other hand, where the wound is small and the discharge slight there is nothing to hold the stone in place and it immediately falls off. Certain of these madstones have been held in families for three or four generations and are guarded as carefully as any heirloom. Cases have been known where people have made long journeys and paid large sums of money to have a madstone applied. Its specific value against rabies is no greater than that of a piece of blotting paper applied in the same manner. The application of madstones gives the unenlightened public a false sense of security, and their use should be discouraged by all possible means. Rabid Dogs and Water. It is commonly believed that mad dogs will not go near water, and in case such an animal is seen to ford a creek or lake it is taken as proof that he did not have rabies. This fear of water is a symptom usually marked in human cases, but is never present in the dog at any stage of the disease. Animals in the early stages when running about the country will cross bodies of water without the slightest fear. Even after the throat becomes completely paralyzed the animal will often constantly attempt to drink water from a pail or bucket if placed within its reach, but, owing to the paralysis of the throat muscles, swallowing is impossible. Dog Days. The idea is prevalent with many people that dogs are particularly liable to go mad during the so-called "dog days," which extend from the first of July to the middle of August. These days are called "dog days" because they cover the period of time when the dog star Sirius is above the horizon with the sun; they have no connection with the dog. On account of the clemency of the weather, dogs probably travel about during this season more than in winter, and hence are slightly more liable to infection. Statistics, however, as well as our own experience about this section of the country, shows that the disease is present throughout the year, and seasons have very little if any influence. It frequently occurs after a person is bitten by a dog that some friend will immediately look into the mouth of the animal.

mel. In case the mucous membrane is black, he will at once conclude that the bite is dangerous, even though the dog appears perfectly normal; but, if the mouth happens to be red, he thinks there is no danger from the bite. This is entirely erroneous. The black color is due to a normal deposit of pigment in the mucous membrane of the mouth. It is present in a certain percentage of all dogs and has no connection with rabies. In this paragraph the writer is not referring to the so-called "black tongue" of dogs in the south, which is the vernacular name for dumb rabies, resulting from the swollen, darkened appearance of the tongue following its extrusion from paralysis of the lower jaw. Lysophobia. Many educated men, including some physicians, claim that all cases of hydrophobia in the human family are the result of wrough-up nervous excitement due to fear on the part of the patient. While at times these symptoms, termed lysophobia, do occur in neurotic individuals who have been bitten by healthy dogs, they are always hysterical in nature, cause no organic lesions, and universally terminate in recovery. Thus lysophobia is entirely distinct from the real disease, which is universally fatal to the human being. In many instances the origin of an outbreak of rabies is difficult to trace. This has given rise to the opinion that the disease may appear in the dog spontaneously, that it is an intrinsic part of his being which may crop out at any time under various extraneous conditions. This is as impossible as it would be for typhoid fever, tuberculosis or any other infectious disease to develop spontaneously. Rabies is an infectious disease and can be produced only by inoculation with the specific virus which causes it. This specific virus is present in the saliva of animals affected with the disease and is transmitted to other animals and persons by the saliva on the teeth of such animals. susceptibility as to Existence of Rabies. In spite of all the work that has been done on rabies there are still many persons, including some medical men, who are skeptical regarding or absolutely believe the existence of this disease. Some physicians say that they have been practicing fifteen, twenty, or thirty years and have never seen a case; but this proves nothing. During the last fifteen years but three cases of the disease have occurred in human beings in Washington, D. C. It can be readily seen, therefore, that only a small percentage of the medical practitioners would see them. Others have advanced the statement that in Constantinople, where there are more dogs than in any other place of equal area in the world, rabies is unknown. This statement has been disproved by Remlinger, director of the Imperial Bacteriological Institute, in that city, who reports many cases of the disease in Constantinople and adjoining provinces. But even if it were a fact, it is no more remarkable than the fact that in London, where there are more people than in any other place of equal area in the world, bubonic plague is unknown, which fact, however, is not remarkable at all. It simply means that the specific cause of the disease is not present at that particular locality. Any person in the United States can see cases of rabies in one or more species of domestic animals if he will get in communication with veterinarians, health officers or laboratories where the disease is constantly being found. With the increasing frequency of the disease in the United States and the characteristic microscopic changes which can be constantly demonstrated, together with the fact that many prominent investigators have been writing on the subject lately, especially in reference to the Negri bodies, there appears to be less skepticism in regard to the disease. Longest Letter Address. What some of the London papers describe as the longest address ever written on an envelope was put on a letter dispatched by a Mahomedan pleader to his nephew, It ran thus: "If the Almighty please, let this envelope, having arrived at the city of Calcutta, in the neighborhood of Kullutollah, at the counting house of Sirajuddin and Alladed Khan, merchant, be offered to and read by the happy light of his eyes, of virtuous manners, and beloved of the heart, Mian Sheikh Ali, may his life be long! Written on the 10th of the blessed Raman, in the year 1296 of Hegira of our prophet, and dispatched as bearing. Having, without loss of time, paid the postage and received the letter, you will read it, and having abstained from food and drink, considering it forbidden to you, you will convey yourself to Jampur, and you will know this to be a strict injunction." Pumping in the Squeak. Small automatic pumps, very ingeniously contrived, sprined air in between the layers of the sole of each finished pair of shoes. "That beats me," said the visitor, "I never saw air put in shoe soles before. Pneumatic like that: are they sprung?" "No, they're noisy," answered the foreman of the Lynn factory. "These shoes are for export trade. They go to Africa. A native African judges the white man's shoes by their squeak. The louder they squeak the finer the article. In fact, the native won't wear a nonsqueaking, silent shoe. It is wind between the soles that makes shoes squeak. Put in enough and your footwear will be as noisy as two pigs under a fence. We, by adding this cheap wind to our product, increase its value more than handisewed throughout would."
