LINCOLN FEELING CHESTY

Lincoln may be pardoned for feeling just a little chesty these days by reason of the way Lincolnites have been doing things of note. But then, you know, Lincoln, has always been doing things worth while. The only difficulty has been that we have not had a medium through which we could make our wants known. The Monitor is meeting that long-felt want.

THE NEGRO SOLDIER AT THE FRONT

Once more the attention of the public has been called to the signal service which the Negro troops of France have rendered to the cause of the allies. Recently that service was made the subject of a complimentary resolution in the French Chamber of Deputies, and it is now announced that a Negro deputy from Senegal is traveling through French West Africa with a view to intensifying voluntary enlistment amongst the different tribes that people those vast territories. The announcement could not come at a more favorable time than the present, when the American newspapers are enthusiastically praising the Negro troops of the United States army at the front for their bravery, self-abnegation, and exemplary bearing. Numerous battalions have been raised among the Negro race for service abroad, and the men who compose their ranks have manifested much the same enthusiasm and comprehension of the lofty task before them as their white comrades-in-arms.

The war, it is said, has revealed to the Negro a new world. As far as the French Negro forces, which numbered at least 120,000 men, are concerned, their conception of service has assumed a form of patriotism almost religious in its sincerity. The point to remember with regard to the employment of French black troops is that they are in a literal sense defenders of their territories against conquest by a ruthless foe. One of the distinct objects of Germany in attacking France was the capture of the French African colonies. This circumstance was brought out in the conversations between the German Chancellor and the British Ambassador in Berlin, on July 29, 1914, when Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg declared that he was quite ready, in return for England's neutrality, to promise that Germany would not annex any territory in France, but would not make a like promise with regard to the French possessions outside of Europe. France thus had no difficulty in achieving a magnificent response to her appeal to the natives of Africa and of Far Eastern colonies to rally to the defense of their land. If one may include the Arabs of Northern Africa under the same heading, then it may be literally said that hundreds of thousands of fighting men from Africa fell into line in the French ranks and fought on the western front. That rally was a magnificent tribute to the benevolent and fraternal policy of France in Africa which has secured for her such stout defenders among the people whom she has taken under her protection, and was the best possible answer to the hypocritical protest, which was heard in Germany's note to neutrals, against the employment of native troops in the Entente armies. This protest came with poor grace from a nation which had secretly worked to create a Holy War in Asia and Africa, and a "black peril" in Africa by fomenting a revolt against the white race in the French and English colonies. Bared from using its own native troops in Europe, Germany of the conscientious scruples did not hesitate to use them against the colonial troops detailed to wrest the German colonies from their unscrupulous owners.

On the occasion of Germany's most recent protest on the subject of the employment of black troops, the note, it is fair to assume, was intended to make a particular appeal to the "sense of humanity" of the American people whose population includes 10,000,000 and more Negroes. But once again Germany failed to gauge the sentiment of other nations or the mettle of the Negro population of the United States. Speaking generally of the prestige of the white race has suffered in this war, then it is not because, as was pointed out in the French Chamber of deputies, of the employment of Negro troops in the melee, but because of Germany's crimes.—Christian Science Monitor.

FORMER SLAVE LIES IN STATE

Denver, June 28.—From a childhood of slavery in a Southern cotton field to genuine honors in death, signalized by the body reposing in state for forty-eight hours, while a thousand white persons filed past to pay tribute in a far swing. There is really little that Julia Greeley did not have in the eighty years of her life.

A solemn requiem high mass was sung in Sacred Heart cathedral for the much loved woman. Rev. Father McDonnell of Sacred Heart was the celebrant and acting with him as sub-deacon was Prof. John Conway, whom the old woman had nursed when he was a baby.
