MRS. SARAH WALKER.

Secretary Trago McWilliams has received a notice from Mr. John R. Shillady of New York, the national secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., asking him not to overlook the fact that a re-election of all officers of the local branch must be held within the next ten days, the date to follow later.

DECORATED FOR BRAVERY

Philadelphia, Oct. 31. — Private Harry Thomas, who enlisted from here in the 369th infantry November 6, 1917, has been decorated by the French for bravery. He took an active part in the battle of the Marne, being three days and nights without food or sleep.

Another interesting Negro song of 1860, "The Octoroon," by Arthur Steele, is among an old collection of sheet music lately catalogued at the Harvard college library.

France's Roads Great Aid In War

Some Are Centuries Old, But in State That Would Put Many American Parkways to Shame.

BY FRED S. FERGUSON,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

WITH the American Army in France, Oct. 26.—An army may "fight on its stomach," but it must be able to travel on roads. The roads of France are one of the marvels of the great war.

Without the wonderful roads, some of which are centuries old, and without the work constantly being done on these roads, it would have been all but impossible for Marshal Foch to move and shift his troops as it has been necessary for him to do.

No roads anywhere in the world have been put to such a test and received such punishment as the roads of France during the last four years. In spite of this, however, most American cities would be proud to have in their parks such roads as are immediately back of the battle lines.

To keep the roads in shape means constant attention. Road workers are always on duty back of the battle zone. Ruts are filled with crushed rock; a thin layer of dirt is then put over the rock and carefully rolled.

Traffic Is Heavy.

Thousands of heavy trucks, guns and wagons constantly are moving over the French roads. A bad stretch of road means delay. This delay may mean failure of ammunition or supplies to be on hand when most needed.

The German high command has held a natural advantage in the railroad system behind its lines. This has had to be overcome by use of the French highways. Long lines of camions carry thousands of French, American or British soldiers from one point to another to take their places in the battle line.

Everything possible in the allied armies has been "motorized." The burden upon the French roads has become heavier and heavier. But when the full story of the allied victory is written, a full share of honor will go to the roads of France, the men who utilized them and the men who kept them up.

The French roads are made of a soft limestone or hard chalk. The stone is crushed, or cracked, by hand into small pieces, and in repairing a bad piece of road the entire highway is resurfaced. The stone is dampened and rolled, a layer of earth then is put on the stone, this dampened and rolled, and the roadbed becomes like one solid piece of stone.

Roads Are Not Muddy.

The main French highways are never muddy, as muddy roads are known in America. They become shiny and slippery after heavy rains, due to loosening of the layer of earth; but the bed of the road remains as firm and hard as though entirely dry. Trucks, automobiles and wagons are never stalled unless they happen to run off the road or into the ditch.

Americans may be seen working on the roads in France. During the recent advance from the Marne, road-makers followed close behind the advancing fighting troops.

In war of movement everything depends upon transport. It was nothing uncommon to see three distinct lines of traffic moving over one road in the wake of the Americans who pushed forward from the Marne to the Vesle. Only firm, smooth roads made this possible.

Ruts and holes were worn in the roads by the heavy traffic, but they were refilled speedily. Temporary repairs constantly were being made. Then, as the advance swung forward and traffic from what was once the immediate rear became lighter, entire sections of road were resurrected.
