BULLOCK'S ORIOLE
Icterus bullocki

Length, about eight inches. Our oriole with top of head and throat black and cheeks orange.

Range: Breeds from South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas to the Pacific ocean and from southern Canada to northern Mexico; winters in Mexico.

Habits and economic status: In the West this bird takes the place occupied in the East by the Baltimore oriole. In food, nesting habits, and song the birds are similar. Both are migratory and remain on their summer range only some five or six months. They take kindly to orchards, gardens, and the vicinity of farm buildings and often live in villages and city parks. Their diet is largely made up of insects that infest orchards and gardens. When fruit trees are in bloom they are constantly busy among the blossoms and save many of them from destruction. In the food of Bullock's oriole beetles amount to 35 per cent and nearly all are harmful. Many of these are weevils, some of which live upon acorns and other nuts. Ants and wasps amount to 15 per cent of the diet. The black olive scale was found in 45 of the 162 stomachs examined. Caterpillars, with a few moths and pupae, are the largest item of food and amount to over 41 per cent. Among these were codling-moth larvae. The vegetable food is practically all fruit (19 per cent) and in cherry season consists largely of that fruit. Eating small fruits is the bird's worst trait, but it will do harm in this way only when very numerous.

TACTICS

By HELEN E. IVERS.

Eva flung herself on the couch with a deep sigh. Hazel, her older sister, smiled encouragingly.

"Yes, sister, she said, 'tell me all about it.'"

Hazel and Eva lived in the small town of W—. They were well known, each in a different way. Hazel was very pretty and rather a belle in the social world, while Eva, though as pretty as her sister, was not as popular with the same people. All of her teachers and more studious friends admired her very much, but that was not her greatest desire.

"Aren't you going to tell me, Eva?" Hazel asked, seeing that her sister was still silent.

"There's nothing much to tell," Eva finally answered. "I'm discouraged, that's all. What I want to know is, how do you get all the boys that you like to notice you? I never can."

There's Jack B—, for instance. I like him, but I'm not especially fond of him, and I show that I don't care whether he comes near me or not, but still I can't go anywhere that he does not follow me. Others, that I would like to have show an interest in me hardly notice me, and I am just as nice as pie to them. I should like to know the reason.

Hazel was amused. "You are funny, Sis. You don't know human nature at all. I'll tell you the reason why."

The next night was the senior dance at the college, and Hazel and Eva were planning to go. All day they whispered together. When night came both girls dressed and then waited for their escorts.

They did not wait long. Very soon the bell rang and Jack B— was heard approaching.

"Oh, dear," Eva sighed. "I wish that he would disappoint me just once in his life. It gets rather boring to be so sure of just what a person will say or do."

Just here Jack came in, rather more sadly than was his wont.

"I'm so sorry, Eva," he said, "but I'll have to disappoint you tonight. I have had a telegram calling me to N—, where my father was in a railroad accident."

"Oh, Jack," Eva was all sympathy. "I hope that it isn't serious."

Jack shook his head. "The telegram doesn't give me much encouragement. However, I must go right away. Probably Hazel will let you go with her."

"Oh, yes," Hazel hastened to say. "Don't worry, Jack. I'll see that she gets there all right."

Jack went toward the door, but before he reached there he turned back. "Will you please come to the door with me, Eva?" he asked. "I have something to say to you."

Wonderingly she followed him, and was hardly outside when he seized her hands rather roughly.

"Oh, Eva, dear," he murmured huskily, "how I love you. Won't you marry me, please?"

She pulled her hands away quickly. "No, Jack," she said firmly. "I can not. I do not love you."

She turned and re-entered the room leaving a dumbfounded Jack behind her.

"An hour later she was at the dance, feeling miserable. The tactics advised by her sister had been used. She was very cool with all of the boys she had been aspiring to have like her, and one and all had decided that that rather 'dull little sister of Hazel,' was a charming little thing when one got to know her.

Eva was certainly outdoing herself tonight. Nobody would ever have guessed that she felt sad, for despite her merriment, she did feel lonesome. Her wish that Jack would disappoint her once had been fulfilled sooner than she had expected it would and although she knew that his excuse had been good, she felt unaccountably slighted. She was undoubtedly relieved when it was time to go home.

About 15 minutes after she reached home, the telephone rang.

"It's for you, Eva," Hazel called who had run to answer it. "You're getting popular, Sis. I certainly was proud of you, tonight."

Wondering who it was, she went to the phone and to her delight Jack's welcome voice came over the wire.

"I thought you'd like to know," he said, "that it was all a mistake about father. He was on the train, but un hurt."

"Oh, I'm so glad," Eva cried. "You must be, too."

"Well," and his voice was certainly joyous, "you can just believe I am but," and his voice betrayed emotion now, "I am sorry that I annoyed you this evening. I might have known that you couldn't care for me."

Eva was trembling, but she managed to answer. "Oh, you needn't be I've almost changed my mind."

"Wha-what?" Jack cried. "Oh, you darling! I'm coming home on the first train in the morning and change that inconsistent mind of yours for good."

And the telephone operator had the audacity to giggle.

A Suspicion.

"How do you know that Bacon wrote Shakespeare?"
 "I don't know it," replied Mr. Stormington Barnes. "But Shakespeare managed his own theater and I don't quite see how a man who had all those gentle and generous ideas in his system could be commercially successful as a manager."
