ENVIIOUS MOLLY
By DON H. BURDICK.

It was Saturday afternoon and Molly's half holiday, but since Dad had gone to war, and the maid had found work in a factory, Molly's half holiday was spent in helping her mother with the housework and caring for the babies.

"If I were only as pretty as Gloria Snow," sighed Molly, "I wouldn't mind washing these old dishes. It wouldn't be nearly as bad, if I knew the steam was making my hair curl into little ringlets around my forehead, and that my long black lashes were covering eyes of heavenly blue. I believe I could bear all things with equanimity if I knew I was a howling, raving beauty, but who ever could care for a stub nose, brown eyes and straggly hair after they had seen Gloria's classic features?"

For a few moments Molly rattled the dishes in a very rebellious spirit, but soon she heard her mother singing to the baby in a low sweet voice: "Father will come to his babe in the nest, Silvery sails all out of the west." And into Molly's really lovely brown eyes there came a protecting look, as she carefully put the dried dishes away.

"What a selfish girl Molly Endicott you are," she said to herself. "You are not only selfish, you are a slacker, for, didn't you promise your soldier daddy that you would do everything you could for the little mother to keep her well and cheerful? And here you are complaining in less than a month's time just because you overheard Dr. Grover tell Gloria Snow how much he admired beauty, and that he always gave special attention to anyone's hands. Now you know you never were a beauty, and your hands were always large, and if they are reddened by dish water it's all in a good cause. Now Gloria Snow you are welcome to Dr. Grover. I don't care for a young man who stays at home in war time, and you haven't the daddy I have to be proud of, and such a brave little mother to love, and—"

"Hello, Miss Molly. I caught you right at it," said Dr. Grover, close beside the self-disciplined girl.

"Good afternoon, Dr. Grover," coolly replied Molly, very conscious of her wet slippery hands, and a lock of black hair hanging straight across her nose.

"I should think you might at least ring the bell and not frighten anyone so," she continued angrily.

"Why—I beg your pardon, I really didn't think you would mind my entering especially when Robert told me not to ring as mother was getting the baby to sleep, and I wanted very badly to take you for a ride. It's such a lovely afternoon. Don't you think you can come, Molly?" asked the young doctor.

"No, I don't believe I can," was the ungracious answer. "You had better go and ask Gloria Snow, I've lots of work to do yet."

"But I don't want Gloria Snow. I want you, you," persisted Dr. Grover. "Just let me help you with the work, Molly. I really can work. I can sweep, and do lots of things, and then you will go with me."

It didn't take Molly long to bathe and change her clothes, and soon she was seated in Dr. Grover's car, and they were riding over the country roads bordered with the sunny golden rod and sweet wild aster.

Dr. Grover drove the car slowly, as he enjoyed watching the various expressions flit over Molly's face at each exquisite bit of scenery. For a while neither attempted to talk, both were too happy.

Finally Dr. Grover broke the silence. "Miss Molly, just why were you so cross when I came this afternoon?"

For a minute Molly hesitated, then laughing she said, "Because I was indulging in a little self-pity out of sheer enviousness."

"You envious, Molly? Of what and whom?"

"I don't just like to tell all my faults," said blushing Molly as she realized just what had made her envious, "but confession is good for the soul, so I will confess. I was envying Gloria Snow. She is so pretty and has everything she can ever want, and I—well the bad feeling is all gone now."

Dr. Grover did not reply; instead he drove his car to one side of the road under the shade of a large maple tree, and stopped it. Then taking Molly's hands in his he said,

"Molly, Gloria Snow is pretty, but don't you know you are beautiful?"

"Please don't laugh at me," almost whispered Molly, "that's too unkind."

"I laugh at you? Why Molly, don't you know how much I love you? I've wanted to tell you before but you have always seemed so indifferent. You do care for me just a little. Say you do, Molly," pleaded the doctor.

"But Gloria, she is so much prettier," reiterated Molly.

"What has Gloria to do with you and me?"

"But my hands are large and sometimes red," murmured Molly.

"Strong, capable hands, able and willing to do the tasks before them, and I love them, Molly," said Dr. Grover, kissing each in turn, "and now dear if you are satisfied that I really want you, just as you are, won't you please answer my question?"

Molly must have been satisfied, for when Dr. Grover had her good-night he whispered "I am going next week dear, and you will then have a soldier sweetheart as well as a soldier daddy." (Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The New Puritan.

The new puritan is instructed in cleanliness, believes in it, practices it. As a good animal guided by an enlightened mind, he purposes to make the best of his body, not to poison it with alcohol or to pollute it with disease. For his own sake and for the sake of the future of the race, he conducts himself morally. His philosopher, guide and friend, however, is the physician and science is his inspiration and his teacher.

Thought Rules the World.

In the end thought rules the world. There are times when impulses and passions are more powerful, but they soon expend themselves; while mind, acting constantly, is ever ready to drive them back and work when their energy is exhausted.—McCosh.

Earthquakes in Italy.
Statistics gathered in Italy throw some light on the question of the relative frequency of earthquakes by day and by night. It has been alleged that the supposed greater frequency of nocturnal quakes is only apparent, being due to the fact that quiet conditions at night make the shocks more readily perceptible. It appears, however, that considering only those shocks which were so intense that they could not have escaped notice at any hour, 865 occurred during the 12 night hours.
