PROTEST CONDITION OF NORTH TWENTY-FIRST STREET

A committee from the Church of St. Philip the Deacon appeared before the council Tuesday morning to protest against the unsightly and unsanitary condition of North Twenty-first street in the vicinity of the church. The council promised immediate relief. The street is to be cleaned of refuse, widened and paved. Three departments were charged with responsibility for the condition of the street and each tried to shift the blame on the other. Mayor Smith said, "Gentlemen, we'll get nowhere by 'passing the buck.' The thing to do is get busy on the job and fix up the street."

HEADS IN—HEELS OUT.

A. A. Rodney, a colored delegate to the labor party of Indiana state convention, related this one:

"The way the workers punish their political enemies reminds me of the story about the white mules and the black mules that banded together for protection against other animals in the field. They decided that when they would lie down at night they would all sleep in a circle with their heads pointing out so that if any enemy approached each one would be on guard. Well, along in the night some varmints came up in front of the white mules—and naturally they started right in kicking for all they were worth. Didn't hurt the enemies a bit—just broke the legs of them black mules, that's all. Then the next night the black mules, with their heads out heard an enemy coming. They started to kicking to beat the band. All they hurt was the white mules. Finally them mules said: 'Fellow jackasses, we ain't hurtin' no body but ourselves this way—let's get our heads together and our heels out and when we kick it will be the oth-fellow who gets hurt—not us.'—New Majority.
