TALENT REMOVES PREJUDICE

In a previous article we had the pleasure of giving a close-up view of D. Macon Webster, a distinguished lawyer of New York. This one will be devoted to a short narration how two of his daughters, the Misses Margaret and Alma, won out against big odds in their desire to perfect themselves musically.

Mr. Webster had invited me to his beautiful home in Brooklyn to meet his family. Mrs. Webster was every inch of her a thoroughbred, well educated and refined. Her pride was in her two daughters, 17 and 15 respectively. Margaret sang and Alma played the piano. But they both needed finishing with good artists. The girls were much darker than their father, and they did not disguise their race—on the contrary, they were very proud of it. But this did not help them to enter the studio of a certain teacher who gave lessons in the exclusive Carnegie hall building. This problem Mr. Webster confided to me and we set about solving the puzzle.

My acquaintance with the musical profession was very extensive then and fortunately also I was not lacking in nerve. I made an appointment with Mme. Z. (we shall omit her name) to take her out for a few visits in Brooklyn to introduce her to the family of Judge Gaynor (the judge was then running for mayor of New York City) and others. Mme. Z. accepted with pleasure and offered to sing at some of the large political meetings to be held in favor of the great jurist's candidacy. In a car, loaned to me for the occasion by Dr. O. M. Waller (of whom we shall have occasion to write at length) we first made a call upon the judge who accepted Mme. Z.'s offer with thanks; then upon Mr. Webster, the attorney for Wanamaker.

It had been previously arranged that we should be received in Mr. Webster's numismatic room, which had portieres dividing it from the music room. An associate in law of Mr. Webster was also to be there. The moment our auto would stop in front of the house, Alma was to commence playing the Ave Maria and Margaret was to sing it (in Latin). We were to "rush" the thing, I on behalf of the guest and Webster on behalf of his associate. Everything went through as planned—and with a happy result.

Mme. Z. opened her eyes as wide as nature allowed and wistfully looked towards the portieres, her eyes indicating a desire to meet the singer and player. Mr. Webster was very gracious, quickly explaining that his daughters were running over in final rehearsal the selection which would be rendered at a church recital that evening. Mme. Z. asked with whom the young ladies were studying and I suggested they would like to study with Mme. Z.—"I should be delighted to have such talent!" exclaimed Mme. Z.—"You will have them!" cheerfully responded Mr. Webster, and just then the last note was sung in the adjoining room, the lights there went out, and a few moments later we heard the outside door open and close.

and Mme. Z. looked disappointed.—"I am sorry, Mme. Z., that I did not have the pleasure to present my daughters to you, but—" I interrupted him with, "Mr. Webster, we have other calls to make, will you and your friend join us in the car until we are through calling?"—Mme. Z. joined me in the request, and at this moment Mr. Webster's associate announced that he was sorry they had another very important appointment, hinting to his friend Macon to close the contract then and there. Mme. Z. did not understand the legal suggestion, but Dorsey Macon Webster did, and acted on the spot. He pulled out a roll of bills (when I think of that roll, a wish comes to me right now that—I had it now) and offered $100 bill to Mme. Z. She hesitated, did not grasp the situation at all—but I asked her, "Would you really like to develop the talent of the girl whom you just heard?"—"Why, of course, Mr. Goodman. Talent of this kind removes all barriers—even lack of time."—I told her to meet Mr. Webster's offer with an acceptance and further details might be arranged at her studio in his office.

Thus Margaret Webster became the pupil of Mme. Z. and rounded out her musical training with a world famous singer and teacher. It was not the money, it was the talent that removed prejudice—one of the strongest human barriers.

E. B. GOODMAN.

THE ST. PAUL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Twenty-sixth and Seward Streets—Russell Taylor, Pastor.

Next Sunday marks the beginning of the third quarter of the ecclesiastical year. This means that every member and friend of the church must bend every effort to put over the program suggested by our general assembly and the presbytery. Let us do much, pray much, expect much. "The harvest truly is ripe, the laborers are few."

The entertainment given by our Indian friends was not the success we had hoped for. Not being used to city travelling, they were nearly two hours coming from the Ak-Sar-Ben friends to the church. This of necessity made them curtail their program.

It is desired that every communicant be present next Sunday for our quarterly communion. These have always proven blessed occasions, and it is well to ever take advantage of them.

The sermon topic Sunday morning will be, "The Price of Our Redemption." Special music will be furnished by the male quartet.

The discourse Sunday evening will be, "The Patmos Vision."

At 7:15 p. m. the Christian Endeavor will hold its regular monthly consecration meetings, which will be led by the pastor. The topic is, "Better Work." Endeavorers, remember your pledge!

Send the missionaries to Europe instead of Africa.

ALLEN CHAPEL A. M. E. CHURCH

5233 So. 25th St.—Phone Market 3475. O. J. Burchardt, Pastor.

Sunday was indeed a lively time with the members and friends of Allen chapel, both young and old, who expressed themselves as being highly pleased over the return of their pastor, who is a pastor of all who come in touch with him.

Large congregations attended all the services Sunday, many strangers among them. A soul stirring class meeting followed the 11 o'clock sermon, led by Mr. Herman.

A great many people in Omaha that do not attend church anywhere, you should remember that practically all that has been done for us as a race has come through the church. This is true whether you are honest enough to admit it or not. So all intelligent and race loving people should attend some church at least once a week. Strangers to the city will find a cordial welcome at any church you should choose to attend and Allen chapel's pastor and members give you a special invitation to come and be at home in our services.
