Osmun arrived in a dving condition, his message dangling from a battered leg. And the case of Osmun was but one of many heroic instances.

Today the pigeon division is an important unit in every well-organized army and navy. So far as the Amerwere concerned the pigeon was at the peak of its efficiency in the

The work of American pigeons the battle of the Argonne was nothing short of marvelous. The division of pigeons that operated between the front line and headquarters in that battle numbered 442 picked birds, and of the total some fifty-odd gave their lives in the performance of their missions. Altogether 403 important messages from the trenches, the artillery stations and the communication units were delivered to division, corps and general headquarters by this brigade of feathered couriers.

Of all the pigeons in the Meuse-Argonne offensive the work of one bird stands out pre-eminent. This bird, a full-blooded homing pigeon, was Os-No soldier ever died more gal-Osmun at 2:35 p. m. began the flight, and 25 minutes later landed wounded and dying near the Rampont headquarters. He had covered the distance at a speed of almost a mile a minute. When he was picked up examination disclosed that his breast had been pierced by a machine gun bullet and the right leg, to which was attached the capsule bearing the message, had been almost shot away. The message was still there.

No. 4084 Credit to Army. Another hero wounded in action was a red cock known to the records as No. 4084. This bird was one of the champion speeders of the service. He had headquarters at Boucy. In the latter part of October, 1918, this pigeon was entrusted with an important message for delivery at corps headquarters. In a driving rain he began the flight. Passing through a machine gun zone a bullet grazed his head, destroying the right eye. The work of the homing pigeon is primarlly a matter of almost perfect vision. Despite the loss of his eye, No. 4084 continued, and within less than an hour was in the hands of the corps commander. The pigeon lived for a year after that and his picture is in the official records of the War depart-

Still another American hero was known as No. 16891. This little aerial courier was a blue homing hen. On November 6, five days before the armistice, the American forces captured Hill 287. It was necessary promptly to acquaint headquarters of the Third Army corps. The pigeon set flight from the front line. The battle was raging at the time and the first part of machine gun and rifle fire and oursting shells. At express speed the oird headed straight for headquarters. The message was delivered and the corps commander, taking into consideration the changed situation, revised his battle plans accordingly. A picture of No. 16891 with the message capsule made fast to her leg is another of the photographic treasures of the United States army.

Story after story might be related of the battle work of the American army pigeons in the World war. These three incidents, however, indicate how hazardous and efficient was their

INSOMNIA CAN BE BANISHED

Trouble Is, With Too Many of Us That the "Prescription" is Hard to Take.

There is a cure for insomnia, but it mfle walk in the country or sawing wood for four hours. One has to give up all other activities, it seems, when one "rassles it out" with insomnia.

Nobody has time for sawing wood for four hours except deposed European monarchs-favored ones of earth whom even a revolution gives leisure. Theodore Roosevelt, who enjoyed so amply all that the world had to give, cut down trees for purposes of bodily invigoration; but then he had the trees to cut down; so also, Gladstone.

Hard, physical labor these great ones considered necessary for their well-being; and it is thoroughly established that it is the best lure of sleep, "balmy sleep, tired nature's sweet re-The point in that quotation is that one has to be tired; not tired in the cares that infest the day, but tired in the legs, arms and dorsal muscles. One can chase away insomnia if one gives his undivided attention to it. That's the difficulty.-St Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Ungainly Flamingo.

The flamingo, so beautiful in coloring and graceful in flight, is not espe with a great flat, down-curving beak, The lower part of this beak forms a deep, broad box, into which the upper part fits like a cover. When the bird is feeding on shellfish or water plane in the shallows and flats the neck is twisted like a corkscrew until the head is upside down; then the top of the beak is pushed along through the mud like a scoop shovel, gathering in the food morsels. During the nesting period the female builds a curious mound of mud like a tiny volcano, in the crater of which a single egg is laid. On this the mother is said to mit with legs drawn up like a grotesque statue on a pedestal.

Oldtime Pharmacies.

Many ancient wood cuts show the pharmacles of the day—usually a mortar and pestle occupy a table in the middle of the room and many shelves on the walls are filled with bottles. Before the introduction of chemistry into pharmacy, a mortar was almost all the equipment that was needed. There were no complicated pills or of labels the bottles or containers bore the coats of arms of titled families and the badges of cities.

In the Sixteenth century there was a reformation in pharmacy. Labels appeared on bottles, and every kind of drug or preparation was carefully preserved in a fitting container. In England Paracelsus simplified the art of preserving by the discovery of tinctures, extracts and metallic saits.

Hander Expurgated. The following ancedote is given in the preface to a gopy of Dr. John Clark's edition of the "Messiah," the testimonial of which is signed by Henry R. Bishop, William Parsons, John Braham, and Muzio Clementi.

"Being on a visit to a friend in a country place the inhabitants of which were more primitive than scientific, Doctor Busby, on his way to church on choristers with a bundle of music books under his arm. 'What have you got there, my man? said the doctor. " to zing at church today,' was the rejoinder. 'Handel,' said the querist his music difficult? 'Why,' said the
