

REVEALING LOVE
By MOLLIE MATHER

HIGH upon the bluff overlooking the sea stood the big house. At its French window a man lingered, a troubled frown on his fine brow, as he watched, far below the wild dance of a young girl across the sands. He turned sharply and called into the shadows the name "Hannah." A woman came from a farther room in answer; her gaze, too, was troubled, as she awaited his errand.

"Hannah," asked the young man, "can you tell me why Mary, our little Mary, is so restless—why no amusement, no talk seems to engage her? Are we at fault that she is discontented?"

"Please, Hannah," he requested, "tell me again the story of our rescue, so long ago."

"It was on a night like this, moonlight everywhere, summer in the soft winds, that the great boat sank, with fire curling her decks. Sank quickly, far, far out in the sea. We were going to the old country—the minister, his kind wife and the two children. You, Bruce, a small chap—Robin, they called you then—and I had been your nurse since you entered the world. And the little Mary, then but a baby. Her mother had put her in my arms when she refused to leave her husband's side as small boats were hurriedly lowered to save the women and children.

"My baby first," she said. "My husband and I may come after. They never came. It was the gentle minister who placed you in my care. So, near the morning, I, with my two small charges, and other women who were of us, reached this same shore. The others went—I know not where. When I learned that you and the baby Mary were orphaned I, who had no home nor country, decided to stay on here, below on the beach, where the humble folks earned their living. I became one of them—your father had left very little money, so I worked with the women, making nets, doing what I could. And two years passed thus before the old Scotch couple, who lived up in this great house which we called 'The Castle,' came down one day to the shore to see about adopting you, the Scotch minister's son. They were not so sure that they wanted a little girl, but the sister, I persuaded them, should not be separated from her older brother. So they took you both, to be companions of their lonely old age.

"But they insisted that you should bear their name, to be their future heir, and you became Bruce Gordon. Little Mary's name, in its simplicity, pleased them. And I was retained to care for you both. If you had relatives in the city where your true parents had lived, they did not interest themselves in inquiring after your welfare. That is all."

The man moved toward the balcony.

"But Mary," he said, still troubled, "seems not so happy since her return from college. Yet, when I ask her if she would seek friends in the city and live a part of the time with them—she becomes truly distressed.

"I cannot bear any place," she said to me last night, "that is apart from you."

"Robert Searles, a nice fellow, too, you must know, Hannah is anxious to marry my sister. I—" he laughed harshly, "I would be miserable all my life if Mary should return his affection, so selfish do I grow in my love for her. But Mary assures me that she cares nothing for Searles nor any other man, save myself."

A smile of sweetness erased his frown.

"So, too, my little sister loves me. Yet, what is the doubt, the vague uncertainty which seems"—he spoke as one trying to solve a new-found problem—"to draw her from me. I might fancy the girl in love, Hannah, if she had mentioned even the name of a man."

"In love"—she whispered, "and always the little lamb is talking with me wistfully about her brother Bruce. I will tell you a part of the story which I have withheld. I hoped never to tell it.

"The little Mary rescued from the ship with you is not your sister. It was a pretty little dancing mother who forced her in dying desperation into my motherly arms. She would stay with her young husband, as I told you, to the last. He was her dancing partner across the continent. Stage people, you understand—yet true and loving. So I kept faith with the trusting creature, and kept her child. And when the old Scotch couple came with their strict standards to adopt a minister's son, why I, who loved as my own the tiny blue-eyed child of the dancer, I longed that she, too, might know advantages, that her future might be assured, and to her I gave the plain name of Mary, and I spoke so that they might take her as your sister. Man, dear, may it not now be love indeed for you—the love of a woman for her husband-to-be—that Mary, in her innocence, has learned to know?"

Very still the young man stood. To the old nurse he spoke no word of rebuke. A light illuminated his face, and he ran, at last, swiftly down the balcony stair. Old Hannah, watching from her window with tear-filled eyes saw presently the man whom she had reared and sheltered fold close in his arms the beloved young girl of her care.

SEAPORT FOR INLAND STATE

Arizona Wants Slice of Mexico to Gain Access to Sea for Its Huge Shipments of Minerals.

Washington.—"The 'Ararat' of a strictly American 'Noah,' real communist inhabitants, a huge lava flow, and salt and sand sufficient to cure most of the world's fish and to keep all its builders and glass factories busy"—these, says a bulletin issued by the National Geographic society, are some of the by-products, valuable and otherwise, that the United States would acquire if it successfully acted on a recently reported resolution of the Arizona house of representatives. The resolution seeks to add to the state a small triangle of northern Mexico.

"It is for quite a different reason, however," continues the bulletin, "that Arizona desires what might be called this 'second Gadsden Purchase' of one of the most desolate and least-known regions of North America. The map shows that while the southern boundary of the state extends due west for a space from the southwestern corner of New Mexico, it then strikes northwestward at a very slight angle. The resolution seeks an arrangement with Mexico by which this bend in the southern boundary of the state would be eliminated so that the line would continue as it started. In a due east and west direction. The triangular area that would be added to the state would be about 240 miles long by about 50 miles wide at the point of greatest breadth.

Bottled Up by Narrow Strip.

"The important consideration is that this long narrow triangle is all that separates Arizona from the sea—the Gulf of California, huge arm of the Pacific. Add it to Arizona, and overnight the state would desert the 27 inland commonwealths and join the 21 that border on salt water. With its hundreds of thousands of tons of minerals to ship, the state is now bottled up by a narrow region undeveloped and little likely to be developed by its present owner. It is felt that even the desolate, practically trackless desert, and the lack of natural harbors on the gulf would not deter Yankee enterprise and Yankee engineering ability from laying down a trail of steel and constructing quays or piers at which ocean steamers would soon be loading, furnishing the cheap transportation that bulky products demand.

"The areas of most states are well known, even the parts sparsely populated. It is hard for dwellers in many other portions of the United States to realize, therefore, that not only is this triangle of Mexico a terra incognita, but that the portion of Arizona which adjoins it is almost equally so. Most of the region south of the Southern Pacific railroad may be thought of as a desert on which small broken rocky ranges of mountains have been superimposed.

"Both north and south of the border, this region is given over almost wholly to a handful of Papago Indians with communistic customs who range as freely as did their remote ancestors, needing to give in their desolate homeland little or no thought to horse-lines or to the governmental machinery of states and nations. The region—both American and Mexican—is known roughly as 'Papageria' and is seldom traversed by white men.

"Through it the international boundary extends, the ultimate in arbitrary lines. Swerving neither to the right nor to the left it extends, a straight, geometrical line, running up sheer cliffs and over crazy peaks, hurdling great valleys and tiny arroyos, crossing deserts, lava flows, and sand dunes, until it strikes the Colorado river some fifteen miles below Yuma. Indian 'Noah' Saved Wolf and Beetle.

"The Mexican triangle of Papageria, which it is proposed to add to Arizona, is even a more inhospitable country than the border region. In addition to the features of the latter, it embraces a district 30 by 40 miles covered by extinct volcanic craters and an ancient lava flow, and hundreds of square miles of great towering sand dunes that create a landscape like that of parts of the Sahara. On the highest lava peaks of Pinnacle, say the old Papago legends, their 'Elder Brother' landed from his ark after the deluge and after floating around the world four times. While his solicitude for animals was not as extensive as that of the Hebrew Noah, he at least managed to save a coyote and a beetle. The Papagos formerly were 'sand people' living in the sand-dune region near the lava fields, with headquarters at the few small water-holes. This region is now practically deserted, the Papagos living by dry-farming and stock-raising farther east and north.

"There is no general knowledge of good natural harbors along the portion of the Gulf of California that would be included in the proposed triangular addition to Arizona, but probably there would be little difficulty in constructing harbor facilities either along Bahia Ararat, which would mark the southern boundary of the addition, or northward toward the head of the gulf. The larger sand dunes are 20 miles from the shore near the gulf head and an equal distance from the Colorado river. The most feasible railroad route probably would be from the mouth of the Colorado, extending

WINSOME CREPE COSTUME

This simple little white crepe outfit has a bit of drawn work done in contrasting color, and when worn with such a really lovely hat is an attractive getup.

TWO-TONE HOSE IS SMART

Silk and Lisle Mixtures Shown in All Shades, With or Without Colored Clocks.

Stockings of silk and lisle mixtures, in all shades are shown, with or without colored clocks. Combinations of silk and wool in similar shades are worn for golf and one of the smartest, perhaps, of all the sport stockings is a heavily ribbed, coarsely woven all-silk white stocking, which has a very dull finish.

Woolen stockings, woven in plaids to match the Argyle sweater, are still very much in favor, but these brilliant checkerboard effects have been so overworked that they should only be recommended in the soberer combinations of black, brown, gray and beige with white. For use with white canvas or buckskin shoes for sports or country wear, plain white lisle stockings are being shown.

Two-tone silk stockings are offered for country wear in two new styles. One skillfully woven stocking (which combines a color with white) gives the two-tone effect at all times. These may be had with or without embroidered clocks, in many color combinations, including navy blue and white, black and white, and cordovan and white, Nile green and gold, or royal changeable, present one color in one light and the other in another. This changeable stocking is of medium weight and may be had in such combinations, for example, as mauve and white, Nile green and gold, or royal blue and gold, to mention only a few.

In conclusion, it is perhaps unnecessary to repeat that the trend of the mode as exemplified by the selections made by women of breeding, is more and more away from the overelaborate shoe.—Vogue.

DRESSES FOR LITTLE GIRLS

Midsummer Frocks Are Charming in Their Simplicity and Varied in Their Colorings.

The showing of little girls' dresses seems to grow more varied and interesting as the season progresses, and organdies of summery shades add to the rainbow hues that distinguish the average showroom. Midsummer dresses now on display are charming in their simplicity and varied in their colorings, and are distinguished by an unusual variety of design. White and colored organdie often are combined, and as a rule there is some hand embroidery to add a note of distinction to these pretty little "dress-up" frocks.

Dotted swiss in colors, combined with white, often is seen and in the dainty party dresses an additional color note is introduced by use of a knot of gayly colored flowers here and there. An especially pretty organdie model has two tiny bouquets of organdie flowers in pastel hues to add to its charm. Small ornaments of bakelite frequently are used on children's dresses, usually as a finish to the sash or as pendants on a contrasting neck cord.

The Buffums are great tourists. During the summer there isn't a week-end they miss going out in their little open car. They never miss a bet. There isn't one of the better-known week-end resorts they fail to visit. But as soon as the cold weather comes the car is drained of water and the storage battery is put in the cellar until spring.

Neighbors of the Buffums have noticed Mrs. Buffum making frequent visits to the garage of late, bearing covered dishes and paper packages of food. One neighbor was finally constrained to find out what these processions meant. Mrs. Buffum explained: "Our house is so hot," she said, "that we needed more ice than in summer, so I'm using the car as an icebox. And I'm saving the price of five gallons of gas a week on my ice bill."
