Equinoctial Storms ONLY SUPERSTITION

U. S. Weather Bureau Says Belief Is Mythical.

Washington.—The weather bureau at Washington has just dispelled several common superstitions concerning the weather. In both Europe and America there is an old belief that a severe storm—the so-called "equinoctial storm" or "equinoctial gale"—is due about the date of either equinox.

The fallacy of this idea consists in identifying any storm that occurs within a week or several weeks of the equinox as the "equinoctial storm," says the bureau. "Statistics show that there is no maximum of storm frequency either in this country or in Europe close to the date of either equinox.

Called Equinoctial Anyway. Occasionally a severe storm of this character sweeps over our Atlantic seaboard, doing a great deal of damage and attracting general attention.

Commenting on the moon's influence on the weather, the bureau says: "Modern science is unable to find any evidence that the moon affects the weather to an appreciable extent, and unable to conceive of any reason why it should.

Dry and Wet Moon Myth. "It is true that the pull of the moon and the sun upon the atmosphere produces a tide in the atmosphere much like a tide in the ocean. But this, too, has been measured and it is found to be insignificant compared with the alternate expanding and shrinking of the atmosphere due to heating by day and cooling by night—the 'heat tide,' so to speak. Hence it is of no practical interest.

Under the former law, patents were registered in each of the 21 Brazilian states and if the inventor failed to register his rights in any state he received no protection in that state.
