"THE ENGLISH WAY" VS. "AMERICAN WAY"

"The English Way" with the race problem pleases Robert Herrick better than the American way, according to his article in the New York Nation this week. Mr. Herrick is a contributing editor of The Nation and author of various novels, of which the latest, called "Waste", has just appeared.

He found himself not long ago on the British island of Careacou in the Caribbean—an island whose population of about 2,000 consists of colored people and a mere handful of white officials. "I had no preconceived formulas about the race question," he writes, "and so I give what I saw and felt for what it may be worth."

"I had two stock questions that I put to the white officials: 'How many crimes of violence have occurred in your jurisdiction in the last two years?' Sometimes they had to go back four and five years to find a case of first class assault or murder. Compare that with any rural district of a similar density of population, either North or South, in the United States! — My other question was: 'Can a white woman of the upper class go safely anywhere at any time of day or night in your island unescorted?' The answer to this was a stare of surprise. 'Of course! Why not?'"

The English government, according to Mr. Herrick, wants the Negroes who live in places like Careacou, under British rule, to govern themselves loyally. His account of his visit is sufficient testimony to the success of the plan. He will take up French colonies in an article about the island of Martinique, to appear in The Nation next week.

A CORRECTION

In the report of the operetta, "A Nautical Knot", published in last week's issue, the name of Miss Lucy Mae Allen, who took the character of "Nance" was omitted. The sentence should have read: "Miss Lucy Mae Allen as 'Nance' . . . interpreted her part with feeling and intelligence."

Quaker Maid Married in Ancient Manner

New York.—A Quaker maiden and a Quaker youth gave their marriage vows, one to the other, in the modest Friends' meeting house near Gramercy park, in East Twentieth street. It was the same simple ceremony, used entirely without the services of a minister, which William Penn and his faithful followers introduced into America 242 years ago. It remains the simplest and briefest nuptial pledge used in this country today.

Standing face to face in the little, unadorned meeting room, Henry Eckroyd Kirk, Jr., of Eaglesmere, Pa., and Enid Mary Richardson of Passaic, N. J., repeated to each other the 33 vows which constitute the marriage vow according to the tenets of the Friends' religion. There was no minister to read the pledges—no ministerial pronouncement of man and wife. Only the placing of one hand within the other and a pledge spoken in the sight of God and man.

London.—Since the armistice, obsolete warships of approximately 2,250,000 tons have been sold. They realized between $20,000,000 and $22,500,000.

Greece Offers to Lend U. S. Statue of Hermes

Geneva.—As a mark of esteem for American democracy, Greece, the youngest republic in the world, has offered to lend the American people one of the most beautiful of statues, bequeathed to her by antiquity—"Hermes Carrying the Infant Dionysus," the masterpiece of Praxiteles, the famous Greek sculptor of the Fifth century.

Can't Lose Pigeons

Kansas City, Kan.—Two pigeons which he had boarded for about a year were no longer desired by Frank Peterson, so he motored them five miles into the country and turned them loose. When Peterson arrived home the pigeons were there clamoring for food.

Find Ailanthus Tree Makes Splendid Pulp

Madison, Wis.—Officials of the United States forest products laboratory here announce discovery of what is declared to be an excellent and valuable pulp wood from the ailanthus tree, otherwise known as the "tree of heaven." A half-cord of ailanthus wood was sent to the laboratory from the Pennsylvania state department of forestry for experimental purposes. Officials declare it developed into a high-grade of book paper.

Tapestries Bring High Prices

London.—High prices were paid by French and English collectors for tapestries, when the late duke of Brunswick-Luneburg's collection came up for auction. One English eighteenth century panel brought $15,000 and three Flemish panels $17,000. The duke's five lots realized $68,000. Five Gobelin tapestries from another collection brought $19,500.

TO SEEK DATA IN FAR NORTH

Captain Bartlett Sails for Arctic on the Bear.

Washington.—Capt. Robert A. Bartlett, famous Arctic explorer and companion of Peary on his successful polar trip, has been commissioned by the National Geographic society to gather data in the Far North in preparation for future aerial explorations of the Arctic regions.

Captain Bartlett is aboard the United States coast guard ship, the Bear, America's most famous "ship of peace," from which he will make his observations during the Bear's annual cruise in Alaskan and Siberian waters.

A romantic feature of the voyage is the fact that the ship which went to rescue Greeley, now, in making what may be her last trip, helps pave the way for future air exploration of the Arctic.

Will Study Aircraft Bases. Captain Bartlett will study especially the locations available in Alaska for bases of operation for aircraft which would fly a zigzag course over the million square mile area between Point Barrow and the North pole—which area is wholly unexplored. He will report upon harbor facilities for supply ships, possible landing places for various types of craft between Nome and Point Barrow, the terrain across country and along the coast between those points, and upon air and water temperature, wind and sea surface conditions.

The Navy department has extended Captain Bartlett every co-operation in his work, which will be of great value as a basis of explorations such as those proposed when the Shenandoah's North pole trip was planned. As the foremost living authority on practical navigation of Arctic waters Captain Bartlett was named a member of the polar expedition board, and during the consideration of the Shenandoah's flight he furnished much valuable data.

An air exploration of the unknown million square miles between Point Barrow and the pole probably would be made in summer months, a time of year when no explorer ever went there, because the unbroken ice of winter is essential for surface travel. Ice floes and open water are aids to air operations in the North, while the summer months promise comfortable flying temperatures and 24 hours of daylight.

"The lure of a million square miles of unknown area, which may reveal land bodies that will be of use when commercial air routes are established across the pole remains a challenge to America," said Captain Bartlett, before he departed.

"Our flag flies at the pole and at Point Barrow—it is up to Americans to find and claim what lies between." On Golden Anniversary Trip. The historic vessel, on her golden anniversary trip will sail out of Seattle, going north to Unalaska, the Pribilof islands, to St. Lawrence and St. Michael islands, to Nome, and thence to ports of call where mission stations and Eskimo schools are visited. She will touch Point Barrow and cruise back to Bering strait, probably going along the Siberian coast on both sides of the strait.

The Bear was launched 50 years ago this spring from the ways at Greenock, Scotland, and was a Dundee sealer before the United States government bought her. Every year since 1883 she has made the lonesome cruise far beyond the white men's frontiers to administer law among Uncle Sam's Eskimo wards and protect his remote property on seal islands.

While the Bear is in Arctic regions she is judge, jury and clergyman. An incident of a recent voyage was the return of an Eskimo maiden to Nome as a witness against a young Eskimo who, having murdered a fellow Eskimo and a missionary, fared forth to set up "the Empire of the Eskimos." The commander holds court, marries, and conducts funeral services, and the crew aid the schools, attend the sick, and perform numerous errands of mercy.

Hunter Kills Cougar With Rabbit Shooter

Portland, Ore.—Edgar E. Watkins, government hunter of Grant county, killed one cougar with an automatic 22-caliber pistol and wounded another.

Watkins was out hunting rabbits to use as coyote trap bait when he came face to face with two cougars. He was about thirty feet from them when they came in sight. Watkins had carried a rifle many a day expecting to meet a cougar. But in the history of the biological survey hunters in Oregon, dating back a decade, none had ever killed a cougar in the eastern part of the state.

So Watkins didn't have his rifle. His automatic pistol was his only weapon. Knowing full well that a 22-caliber bullet is not expected to make a showing against a big cat, and realizing that the animals if wounded might turn on him, Watkins nevertheless opened fire.

Fortunately for him neither attempted to attack him. Instead they tried to flee.

As the smaller one, a yearling, turned, Watkins dropped him. At the older beast, apparently the mother, Watkins sent four shots which, blood stains in the snow told, took effect.

"From 'Superman' to Man."
By J. A. Roberts. Published by The Lenox Publishing Company, 2372 7th Avenue, New York City. Price $1.50. Postage 10c.

Anyone who wants to be provided with an enormous stock of information confuting the doctrine of white racial superiority should own this book. It depicts a Negro porter of unfailing humor and courtesy debating the race question with a rabid Southern senator. Of course, the author makes the Negro convert his antagonist. Whether he would have done this in real life in very doubtful but he would certainly have silenced him. For the Southerner speaks as most of us would speak on any question that we might chance to debate on a train, from personal observation and from casual reading; whereas, the Negro speaks from a life-long study of his subject. Moreover he has traveled much and can cite instances of customs among people from Missouri to Madagascar. He meets his antagonist fairly and at every point of the bout worsts him. The Southerner goes to be furious, sure that he will never argue with the "Nigger" again, and yet impelled to take up the battle on the morrow. His conversion at the end, his offering the porter a better job, is a bit of unfortunate sentimentalism. It makes the story unreal, whereas it might have ended on a clever note. After the Negro has gotten the better of the senator on every point; on salvery, which he shows was common among white as well as black; on sexual passion, he scores very well there; on intermarriage, his facts regarding intermarriage, he takes the city of Chicago as an example, are illuminating; after his thrusts have again and again struck home, the senator asks: "What would you offer as a solution of the problem?" To which the porter replies, "A sense of humor." "Name something easier," wisely says the white man.

It is this sly sense of humor, which makes the book something more than the platitudinous recital of race equality that is often dished up to us. The porter is poking fun at his antagonist a great deal of the time. He is amused at him. He knows just how to knock the props from under his opponent's arguments and then enjoys with the utmost politeness the Southerner's discomfort. The first night the senator roars, the second night he fumes, the last night he asks his questions almost with an air of humility.

It would be wonderful if such a debate as this happened in real life. There is no reason that it shouldn't—except for the porter. He is too heroic to be anywhere but in fiction. Such self-control would be worthy of the Spingarn Medal. But many might try to approach him. And they could nowhere go for better ammunition with which to do this than to the pages of "From 'Superman' to Man."

Advertising Talk

A hen is not supposed to have Much common sense or tact, Yet every time she lays an egg She cackles forth the fact.

A rooster hasn't got a lot Of intellect to show, But none the less most roosters have Enough good sense to crow.

The mule, the most despised of beasts, Has a persistent way Of letting folks know he's around By his insistent bray.

The busy little bees they buzz, Bulls bellow and cows moo, The watch dogs bark, the ganders quack, The doves and pigeons coo.

The peacock spreads his tail and squawks, Pigs squeal and robins sing And even serpents know enough To hiss before they sting.

But man, the greatest masterpiece That nature could devise, Will often stop and hesitate Before he'll advertise.

Merchants who are wise And want our people's trade Use THE MONITOR to advertise And thus their fortune's made.
