Rail Laying Machine Does Work of 24 Men

Harrisburg, Pa.—A machine that lays from 90 to 85 steel rails in an hour and displaces a railroad gang of 25 men is at work on the Bethlehem branch of the Reading railway. The machine, commercially known as the "Burro," is mounted on a standard gauge truck and is self-propelling to a speed of 15 miles per hour. It is driven by a gasoline engine, which also operates the boom and cables. The crew consists of a crane-man and three laborers. Other features, except the rail laying, are identical with the ordinary hand methods. After the removal of the worn rail from the track all spike holes are plugged and new tie plates applied. The rail is put into place and the machine then proceeds over the rail just laid to the next open joint on the opposite side, after which the operation is repeated.
