ELECTRIC INDUSTRY NOT CAMPAIGNING AGAINST GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP

Vice-President, Nebraska Power Co., Refutes Charge That Utilities Are Spreading Propaganda in Schools.

A sinister attempt is being made to induce the public to believe that the electric industry has been carrying on a propaganda campaign against government ownership in the schools and colleges, according to J. E. Davidson, vice president and general manager of the Nebraska Power company.

"The facts do not warrant this charge," said Mr. Davidson. "We have publicly stated our position several times and we insist that no attempt was ever made by a public utility in Nebraska, or within my knowledge, anywhere, to spread propaganda of any sort in the public schools or colleges."

"The electric companies of Nebraska issued a pamphlet on 'Electricity' which was offered to any teachers of public schools that desired them but there was not one bit of propaganda in this pamphlet. It dealt entirely with electricity and its many uses. This pamphlet was not a text book. It was merely a paper covered pamphlet or leaflet."

Mr. Davidson said that there has been propaganda in the schools, but not issued on the part of the electric companies but issued against the electric industry and against the American tradition of private enterprise and individual initiative.

John Spargo, who for a number of years was engaged as a lecturer presenting socialistic doctrines to students in colleges and high schools, wrote recently to the Chicago Tribune saying that the investigation by the federal trade commission of public utilities has been very unfair. In his letter he told how he and others spread propaganda in the public schools against private ownership and for public ownership.

Mr. Spargo in his statement said: "Every man who is at all familiar with the facts, knows that the federal trade investigation would not have been ordered by the senate were it not that the campaign of malignant abuse and cowardly innuendo has caused so many of our servants in office to fear being branded as hirelings of the 'power trust.' Every man who has thus far dared to raise his voice against this sort of political muckraking and in defense of American industry has been thus assailed. I have been personally so accused despite the fact that I have never received a single dollar, or any equivalent thereof, from any utility corporation, or its agents, directly or indirectly, either for services rendered, support given, or for any other purpose whatsoever. I have never received pay, directly or indirectly, from any utility company or its agents for speaking against public ownership. But for many years I did receive pay for speaking in favor of public ownership from organizations maintained for that purpose."

The Chicago Tribune, in connection with Mr. Spargo's letter, said the following:

"By a fortunate coincidence, The Tribune is enabled today, Labor Day, to present to its readers a letter from Mr. John Spargo dealing with the senate's inquiry into the so-called power trust and its propaganda. Mr. Spargo writes as a former socialist who was engaged for a number of years as a lecturer presenting socialist doctrines to students in colleges and high schools in many sections of the country. He knows that the power companies did not present their case in academic circles until long after the case for public ownership had been presented by advocates of collectivism. He does not believe that the best interests of this country will be served by having the coming generation know only one side of the argument, and that the theoretical as opposed to the tested side. In that view he will be supported by American labor."

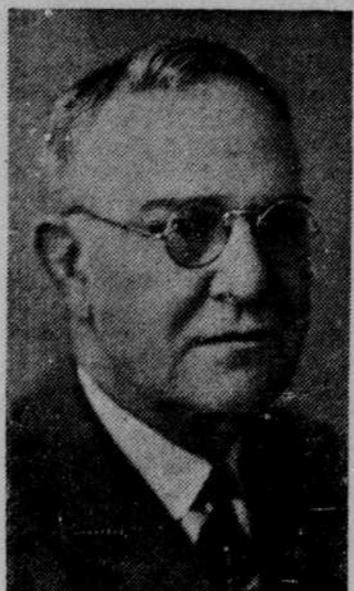

"It is fortunate for this country that our labor movement has never been captured by socialism as so many of the labor movements in foreign countries have been. The fact that the great majority of our unions have persisted in confining their activities to their natural function, collective bargaining, has helped to discourage the growth in this country of the class consciousness which is the first goal of most of the foreign labor movements. Class consciousness is supposed to make unions strong; instead, it makes them weak, for it imbues those who possess it with a sense of inferiority. Class consciousness encourages the belief that, pending the millenium, the line between the laboring man and the capitalist is one which never can be crossed. The class conscious workingman devotes his thought to the millenium when he might be striving to improve his own condition. Class consciousness discourages workers from making any effort to increase production — for that is supposed to be in the interest of capital—though it must be apparent from recent American industrial history that the most direct and probably the only means by which the standard of living can be improved is through increased production. "The American labor movement has been the despair of academic theorists because labor refused to take any part in supporting the notions of doctrinaires. The impetus for the inquiry into the so-called power trust did not come from labor. The wisdom of the policy followed by our unions is summarized in the recent news items reporting the incorporation of country clubs by union workmen."
