"I suppose you know the usual sort

Miss Desmond had colored faintly

"When you want to earn your bread.

you do not expect to be housed and paid merely to amuse yourself. I service for certain remuneration as a

"I think it is," said Miss Desmond,

Mrs. Saville looked at her sharply,

"I shall be two-and-twenty in Sep

"Hum! you look at once more and

"Yes. Whether I can read well is

"I know what that means. Now suppose you read me this speech of

"That will do. You read fairly well.

You do not pronounce some names

"For names there is no rule, and

ometimes opinions respecting them

Mrs. Saville was silent for a mo ment. "If you are inclined to try a couple of months with me, I am will

"That is best. Trial only can prove

"Have you settled about terms with

"Yes; they are most satisfactory."

"Very well. I shall go to the coun-

"There is the bell. Pray join me at

"Thank you, I shall be very happy.

Saville; "knows her own value, probably. So much the better, I could not

At luncheon the hostess started var ious topics in an easy, unstudied way,

and found that her young guest, though far from talkative, was quite equal to discussing them intelligently.

As soon as they rose from the table.

Miss Desmond took leave of her new

CHAPTER V.

Mrs. Saville was far too much preoccupied by her bitter reflections and vengeful projects to bestow many thoughts upon the new member of her household. But Miss Desmond received the expected summons in due course, and journeyed punctually by the appointed train towards her new Inglefield, Mrs. Saville's place, had an air of seclusion not to be found at tions. The picturesque country round

Egham was comparatively free from the eruption of villa residences which

Mrs. Saville, who felt the quiet of her country home rather oppressive.

began to wish for some one to break

the painful monotony of her thoughts quite unconnected with the past-"the past," to her, meaning the ever-present

a certain sense of relief in the prospect of companionship, for in truth

she was, and always had been, a very lonely woman. When, therefore, short ly before dinner, Miss Desmond arrived, she was received with compara

"I told them to send down the omnibus, as it would be more convenient for your luggage," said Mrs. Saville.

"My luggage consisted of one dress-basket," sald Miss Desmond, smiling

"Considering that my stay may be but short, I did not like to bring more."

"That was prudent. Now I am go ing to dine early-that is at six-in order to take a drive afterwards; the evenings are the best part of the day.

Saville was very silent, but so long as they moved smoothly and rapidly through cool dewy woods, fragrant fields, and gently winding lanes with rustic fences and picturesquely-broken banks, the silence was not oppressive loss of her nearest and dearest; the parlemant god, thereath all, the on

That first evening was trying. Mrs.

after they had exchanged greetings.

mage of her offending son. She had -some one whose face and voice were crowd other localities.

tive cordiality.

double the distance in other direc-

summons whenever it came.

gentlewoman."

home.

"Takes things coolly," thought Mrs.

You have been on them in the way you prefer."

less than that. Can you read aloud?"

"Can you play or sing?"

"I can play a little-daughter. That is all nonsense."

calmly.

tember next."

properly."

ing to try you."

Mr. Rawson?"

you will join me

luncheon."

"Yes, fairly well."

stand a gushing girl."

if we suit each other."

ered as if she were a little nervous.

CHAPTER IV.

The vindictive pleasure of signing of service expected from a companion? her will, and receiving a stiff acknowledgment from Mr. Rawson of Its the agreeable when there is no one safe receipt, occupied Mrs. Saville for else to talk, and, above all, understanda few days, before the expiration of ing when to be silent. It can't be the which she received a few polite lines | most delightful bind of life; but you from Miss Rawson saying that, if will have a comfortable home if you quite convenient, Miss Desmond would stay." call on Mrs. Saville between one and two on the following day. p easant smile, though her lips quiv-

"I am sure I hope she will do, and not be too silly," thought the imperious little woman, as she penned a brief acceptance of the apointment. "The generality of women are wonderfully foolish and narrow; though men are Idiotic enough too, occasionally. A | be. whole day of Richard's company is almost more than I can stand; yet he is always respectable, and would never commit the culpable folly his-there, I will not think any more of that."

The morrow came bright and warm, and Mrs. Saville established herself in the smaller of her two drawing rooms, a beautiful and gorgeously-furnished room, full of buhl and marble-inlaid tables, luxurious chairs and sofas, old in which something like a smile lurketceteras which wealth can give. It abruptly, opened on a small conservatory in which a fountain played, and was cooler than her boudoir.

She was half-reclining among the cushions of a lounge, with her preclous little dog beside her, and trying | for you to judge." to give her attention to a newspaper, when the door was opened and "Captain Lumley" was announced.

"Why, where did you come from?" holding out her small-beringed hand to paper. Miss Desmond took it, and ima tall, slight, well-set-up young man, mediately began. After about ten minwith light hair and moustaches, laugh- utes Mrs. Saville said, not unkindly ing eyes, and a certain resemblance to Hugh Saville, though of a slighter, weaker type.

"From Herondyke, my dear aunt," he returned, drawing a chair beside her. "I have just a day or two in differ. I shall, of course, pronounce town, and I thought I'd try if you were still here."

"Are you on your way to Houns low?"

"Yes, just like my luck! they give me my leave when there's not a thing to do. And that young beggar Mignolles, my sub, gets it next week." "I suppose you are all as usual?"

"Yes. Uncle Everton is at Herondyke just now, and in great force. He is the most amusing old boy I ever Aunt Saville My uncle said he called here on his the Continent, I believe; then you can way through, and you were not well | read French?" enough to see him."

"I was not well; and I certainly should not get out of my bed to see Lord Everton."

"Wouldn't you? Well, I-Oh-ahyes, to be sure," said the young man, hesitating. "I am glad to see you looking so much better, at all events," he went on. "When do you go down to Inglefield?"

"On Saturday." "I can often ride over and see you." continued Lumley, with a fascinating smile. He had a nice voice and a pleasant caressing manner; indeed, he was considered a very irresistible young man by the women, and "not a bad fellow" by the men.

You are very good," frigidly, "I suppose there is hardly a soul left in town. Just called at the Montgomerys', and found the house shut up; so I came on here to have a chat and a bit of luncheon."

"My dear George, I don't mean to give you any luncheon. A lady is coming here; she ought to be here now. I am going to test her qualifica tions for the onerous office of companion to myself, and I can't have you here talking nonsense." "Won't she be a bore?"

"Do you think I shall allow myself

"Well, no, Aunt Saville," said Lumley, with a bright smile, "I don't think you will." Here the door was again thrown open, and the butler announced, with much dignity, "Miss Desmond." "There, you may go," said Mrs. Saville, impatiently. "Very well," said the young man, good-humoredly. "I will call again before I leave town. My mother sent you her best love."

"I am very much obliged. If you want a dinner, come back here." "A thousand thanks, I am already engaged. Au revoir!" He shook hands and retreated, pausing at the door to let a lady pass-a tall, slender young woman, in a simple black dress, as straight as it could be at that period of flounces, furbelows, draperies, and gashes. The newcomer was young, yet youthfully mature; she wore a quiet, becoming bonnet, and was rather pale healthfully pale-with wavy nut-brown hair, a pair of dark gray or blue eyes, deepened by nearly black brows and lashes, a sweet pathetic mouth and red dewy lips, she moved with easy undulating grace suggestive of long, well-formed limbs. "A fine girl," was the young dragoon's mental commentary, as he stood aside to let her pass, and, with a slight bow, disappeared from the room.

"Miss Desmond," repeated Mrs. Saville, "come and sit here beside me." She looked piercingly at her visitor as she made a slight courtesy and handed her a note before taking a seat, say ing, in a soft, clear, refined voice, "Mr. Miss Desmond had plenty to think of Rawson was so good as to give me a few introductory lines."

"Quite right. A lawyer's instinctive precaution," returned Mrs. Saville, vanishing of many a dream that even the wanderer, proud of the victory of ing. Once when she fell on the ice opening it and glancing at the con-during hope which in such strange astures is too deeply rooted to be scorched by the noontide heat or withered by the midnight blast-the instinctive consciousness of her own tenderness and loyalty, which gave vitality to her belief in the possibility of happiness. The quiet beauty of the country, the soothing tranquillity of the hour, gave her an exquisite sense of rest which she thankfully accepted.

Returned, however, and shut up in the lamp-lit drawing-room, silence did become oppressive, and Miss Deamond, remembering her employer's bint, felt rejuctant to break it.

"I suppose you do needlework? Girls like you generally have something of that kind in their bands,"

"I do a good deal, and I have some that can appear in a drawing-room." "I used to do fancy-work myself," said Mrs. Saville, "for it is intolerable to sit idle; but I find I dare not trifle with my eyes, which I have always -reading aloud, writing letters, doing tried too much. However, I must do omething. I cannot sit with my hands before me while you read." "Knitting is not bad for the eyes," uggested Miss Desmond. "I have always despised it as pure v mechanical, but now I shall be obliged to adopt it. Do you know how to knit?-can you teach me?"

while she listened, and now smiled, a "Yes; I did a good deal of knitting then I was in Germany," "Oh! do you understand German? "I could make my way in Germany; but I cannot read German aloud as I think I know what my duties would do French."

"And I do not understand a word of "Add to this knowledge that I am a the language. I was only taught very exacting person, without a tinge French and Italian. Ah, what a poof sentiment. I have no notion of tent epitome of mankind's opinion, the treating any one who does me certain rage for that uncouth tongue as soon as the race that speaks it succeeded! Success is the measure of everything."

"I cannot think so. We have no plumb-line with which to fathom the depth where future triumph lies hidand met a pair of very steadfast eyes den under present failure."

"Toat is no argument," returned china statuettes, flowers, and all the ed. "How old are you?" she asked Mrs. Saville. "Now, Miss Desmond, I am going to my room, and I dare say you will be glad to do the same. breakfast in summer at eight. Goodnight."

The next few days enabled Mrs. Saville and her newly-established companion to fit into their places. "She is less formidable than I expected." thought the latter. "I must keep constantly before my mind that she is on her trial with me, as I am with her. she exclaimed, not too cordially, and Lord Hartington's," handing her the I am not bound to spend my life here, nor have I given up my freedom. She interests me; for, hard as she seems I believe she is not without heart. Shall I ever be able to find it?"

"That girl is not so tiresome, after all. She is not a bit afraid of me,' mused Mrs. Saville. "How I hate and despise folly and cowardice! they gen- style of "The Book of Months." It is erally go together. There's a great deal of style about her, yet she must have been always steeped to the lips in poverty. If I had a daughter like her, I should want the first statesman in England for her husband. Bah! what folly! If I had had a daughter she would have been as indifferent to me as the rest, and would probably have married a groom to spite me. As no one cares for me, I had better con widely known in the professional field centrate my affections on myself. Peo than Mr. Forrest Crissey, for many try in a day or two, and then I hope ple may be indifferent to love, they are years western editorial representative ver indifferent to po wer; and money is power, especially if backed by com-

So the knitting and reading went on successfully, and Mrs. Saville was sometimes surprised by the light-hearted enjoyment which her companion showed in any drolleries which cropped up in the course of their readings. Mrs. Saville herself was not without a certain grim sense of humor, but she gleamed in Miss Desmond's expressive land. eyes.

(To be continued.) WON DRESS FROM JEFFERSON.

lady patroness, promising to obey her Original Gretchen in "Rin Van Winkle" Still Living in London. "Really," thought Mrs. Saville, as Mrs. John Billington, who is still she dressed for an afternoon airing, "I telleve that girl may do. If she does not, why, it is no great matter. She certainly has the air and manner of a living in London and who took the original part of Gretchen in Joseph Jefferson's first production of Dion Boucleault's "Rip Van Winkle" it London in 1865, relates that in those days an American actor was leoked upon in the same light a Charokee In dian would be at this time, the New York Herald says. When she was told there were only two women in the play and that she was suited to neith er part, she said: "Then I shall gt through the Provinces with Toole." But to this Boucicault objected, as he al ductions, so she was obliged to play the part of Gretchen.

The play was a great success from the very beginning. There were five and Mrs. Billington said to Mr. Jeffer son, "It will run a hundred nights." Mr. Jefferson modestly replied that not. "What will you bet?" said the act ress.

"I am willing to wager a new sill dress to a silk hat," was the reply. The piece ran 170 nights, and te this day Mrs. Billington points to a photograph taken of herself in the very atik dress she won in her bet with Jefferson. So sure was Bouckault of the fail ure of the play that he refused to be present at the first performance, and it 'vas several nights before Jefferson in the audience, recognizing him by formance the author went around to but there would be occasional amus alated him. "But," he said, "Joe," I think you are shooting over their heads." "I am not even shooting at theh heads," was the reply. "I am aiming at their hearts." After the first week in London i was Joe Jefferson's "Rip Van Winkle," not Boucleault's, although the play that the name of Boucicault alone was sufficient to draw a large house, and the name of Jefferson did not appeal -the struggles and difficulties of in big letters, nor was it even "fea youth spent in genteel poverty; the | tured."

Upon his return America greeted

THE FIRST PASSENGER TRAIN IN AMERICA.

is a curious fact that it was the South Carolina Railroad that hastened the beginning of the New York & Eric Railroad, and made it the second ratiroad in the world projected and designed for the use of locomotive power. When the Erie was ready to place its first locomotive in service in 1831 there were only four locomotives in use in this country, and only one railroad then in operation had been built with the original intention of having locomotives as its motive power. This was the South Carolina Railroad, between Charleston on the coast and Hamburg on the western border of South Carolina. In December, 1830, the first six miles of that railroad were opened. The pioneer locomotive built for use upon it was designed by Horatio Allen, who became president of the New York & Erie Railroad Company some years later. It was built at the West Point foundry, New York City, and was named "The Best Friend of Charleston." The engine was placed on the railroad in October, 1830.

After several trips the locomotive was pronounced ready for regular operation, and it was attached to the first train load of passengers ear drawn by a locomotive in this country, Jan. 15, 1831. The success of the trial trip satisfied railroad men that a similar road would be feasible between New York and Lake Eric. "The Best Friend of Charleston" was thus instrumental in spurring men to action in the matter of a railroad between the Hudson river and Lake Erie. The history of its career and fate may properly have a place in this chronicle. That history was thus tersely related in the Charleston Courier of June 18, 1831:

"The locomotive 'Best Friend' started yesterday morning to meet the lumber cars at the forks of the road, and, while turning on the revolving platform, the steam was suffered to accumulate by the negligence of the fireman, a negro, who, pressing on the safety-valve, prevented the surplus steam from escaping, by which means the boiler burst at the bottom, was forced inward, and injured the engineer and two negroes. The boiler was thrown to the distance of twenty-five feet. None of the persons are dangerously infured. The accident occurred in consequence of the negro holding down the safety valve while the engineer was assisting to arrange the lumber cars, and thereby not permitting the necessary escape of steam above the pressure the engine was allowed to carry."

That was the first locomotive explosion on record, but the "Best Friend" was patched up at a machine shop, and was in service at long time there-

NEWS OF RECENT BOOKS

"Canadian Born" will be the title of Mrs. Humphry Ward's next novel. It hokey-pokey." will run serially in the Cornhill Mag-

E. F. Benson has completed two new books. One is a novel, "The Os. a student came in from skating combornes," the other is a volume in the plaining that she believed her nose entitled "A Reaping.

Perhaps the most important announcement of fiction to be published in 1909 is that of a new novel by Sudermann. His latest work-perhaps his greatest-is a novel entitled "The Song of Songs" (in German "Das Hohe Lied").

Few of Chicago's writers are more of the Saturday Evening Post, Mr. Crissey has recently become editorial director of the Currier Publishing Company, which issues the Woman's World. Wilson Vance, father of Louis Joseph Vance, well known for his "The Black Bag" and "The Brass Bowl" and other novels, is himself the author of "Big John Baldwin," which Henry Holt & Co. expect to issue in the fall, was sometimes surprised, and not too Big John is a Puritan gentleman who well pleased, at the quick perception has experiences as a colonist in Amerof the ridiculous which so often ica and also under Cromwell in Eng-

Basil King, author of "The Inner Strine," was for ten years rector of Christ Church in Cambridge, and since 1900 he has been devoting himself to a professional career of letters. His first novel was "Griselda," and it was followed by "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "In the Garden of Charity," "The Steps of Honor" and "The Giant's Strength." Mr. King is 50 years of age, and his present residence is in Munich. Mrs. Frances Boyd Calhoun died on Tuesday. June 12, at he- home in Covington, Tenn. To the many who have read her "Miss Minerva and Willian Green Hill" this news will bring sincere regret. The book bore the impress of a lovable personality. Of late Mrs. Calhoun has been busy on the manuscript of a second book of ways wanted her to appear in his pro the same nature, which unfortunately is now lost to the reading public.

Lieutenant Shackleton, the Irishman who has returned to London from his south pole expedition, is described as or six curtain calls after the first act "a man of extreme modesty, very reluctant to speak of his personal experiences, wishing rather to refer to the admirable work of his colleagues. he was willing to wager that it would He is broadly built and of medium height, with strong, determined features suggesting a will to overcome extraordinary difficulties and hardships. His sparkling blue eyes indicate good nature and his whole appearance suggests a type that men would follow and suffer privations for."

COLD-WEATHER COUNSEL.

German Instructor Made Many

Amusing Slips in Her English, The late Prof. Carla Wenckebach, of Wellesley College, notwithstanding knew him to be among those present her long residence in America, never quite mastered the English language. his shiny bald head. After the per She spoke it forcefully and fluently; the actor's dressing room and congrat | ing slips, some of which enrich to this day the traditions and anecdotes handed down from class to class. A Wellesley girl who was in one of Professor Wenckebach's earliest classes recalls a few of them. "It is so cold!" declared the pro fessor one day, when the mercury had dropped far below zero. "It is too cold, even for me. I have been sitwright was at that time so popular ting all the morning with my feet over the transom."

It was not often cold enough to drive her to sit by the register-which was, of course, what she meant-for she was a fine, vigorous, outdoor woman, and passionately fond of skatat twenty-two life had taught her must ap American actor in an Americas and received a severe sprain just as was transfer the laber who had no word of complaint for the pain; she merely rejoiced that the accident did not happen until she had finished her sport.

"I have always skated," she told one of her pupils. "We skated much in East Frisia when I was a girl. There is nothing new to me in secing a crowd of girls on the ice. What is new to me is to see them playing

It was hockey they were playingalways a pretty sight as well as, to her, a novel one. Another time, when was frozen, and hastened, shivering, to thaw herself by the radiator, Fraulein Wenckebach wisely deterred her. "No, no," she cried, "you must not do that! The radiator is too powerful; a nose should be melted gradually. Then it will be all right, especially if before you go out again you dip it in camphor ice-cream."-Youth's Companion.

CHEMISTRY 4,600 YEARS AGO.

Employed by Chinese in Cure of e Philosopher's Stone. Yu Tung Kwai, a Chinese delegate to the chemistry congress, read an interesting paper before a section of the assembly yesterday on the chemical industry of China. Alchemy, he said, was known in China at least 2,700 before Christ, and China still occupied an important position in regard to the chemical industries of the world.

The principal object of the practice of alchemy 4,600 years ago, he said, was the cure of disease. Efforts were also made to evolve a preparation somewhat analogous to the philosopher's stone, the result attained being known as gold pills.

Metallurgical work and dyeing were known in China from time immemo rial, while the processes of making gunpowder, paper, glass and porcelain all originated in the same country while it is admitted that the Chinese of the Seventh century had a clear knowledge of oxygen. "Circumstances in China," said the lecturer, "have now changed. Since China has been known for thousands of years to be an agricultural country and to possess an enormous wealth of undeveloped minerals, attention has naturally been directed to the study of these two branches of applied science. "A board of agriculture and indus tries has been instituted, composed of different bureaus, each bureau managing some department, such as land surveying, mine surveying, irrigation work, etc. Having its headquarters in Pekin, the affairs of each province are controlled directly by provincial execrtive committees, and shortly, it is believed, government experimental stations will be established. Also in the formation of chemical societies provincial societies have been formed which will constitute sectional branches. Agricultural societies too are being formed in good numbers, and the last few years have witnessed the establishment of 'commercial guilds,

"A characteristic feature about the teaching system of China is that chemistry, together with mathematics, is a compulsory subject in the elementary chools. This is innisted upon, not only that the pupil's mind may be trained, but also that the young student may acquire some elementary knowledge of natural phenomena."ondon Standard.

Please Tell Us.

Standing in line before the mone der window at the postoffice yester day were two men. One of them was 'next," but as his turn came he permitted a woman to step in ahead of him to get an order. When she was through the man let another woman in shead of him. This made the other man and. Say," he said to the man ahead, "please don't be a gentleman at my expense. I'm in a hurry," Was he right or not?-Denver Post.

Some women never entirely lose a superior air toward their spinster friends until their husbands take them out and beat them.

Nobody admires a militia general.

GOOD SHORT STORIES

Senator Hernando De Soto Money of Mississippi, it is said, has the ability to be more acutely annoying than almost any other senator when he starts. And he starts at slight provocation. One of the stories current in Washington is of a certain aged correspondent, who may be called Dan Smith. "Poor old Dan," said one friend to another. "He's getting hortibly absent-minded-can't even recognize faces." "And why?" asked the other friend. "Told me to-day he and had a pleasant talk with Senator Money."

A High street small boy, about 5 rears old, was taken to an entertainnent by his mother the other evenng. It was 10:30 o'clock when they teached home and the little fellow was very tired and aleepy. He undressed juickly and hopped into bed. George," said his mother sternly, I'm surprised at you." "Why, mamna?" he asked. "You didn't say your prayers. Get right out of that bed ind say them." "Aw, mamma," came rom the tired youngster, "what's the ase of wakin' the Lord up at this time of night to hear me pray?"

There joined the police force of Lonion a young Scotchman but recently arrived from his native land. Being letailed one day to block the traffic m a certain thoroughfare where members of royalty were expected to pass, he was accosted by a lady hurrying to keep an appointment, who thrust her head from the carriage window to remonstrate with him over the delay. 'I canna' let you pass, ma'am," answered the man of the baton. "But, sir, you do not know who I am. I am the wife of a Cabinet minister.' "It dinna make na difference, ma'am," he answered. "I could na let you pass if, you were the wife of a Presbyterian minister."

General Staws was a martinet, a stickler for etiquette, a man with a prodigious sense of his own dignity, and when Private S. Weigh, the bugler, one day failed to honor him in passing with the customary salute he flew-internally-into a towering rage. "Knutt," he said that afternoon to the colonel, "Private Weigh failed to salute me this morning. A breach of stiquette, sir! A piece of impertinence-my dignity-haw! See that the man is severely reprimanded." Colonel Knutt trembled and nodded and next day spoke to the captain. "Bisket," he said, "Private Weigh failed to salute the general yesterday. Please see that he is severely raprimanded," "Right, sir," said Captain Bisket, and the next day he spoke to the sergeant. 'Sergeant," he said, "Weigh didn't salute the general. See that he is severely reprimanded." "Look here, Binks," said the sergeant next day to the corporal bugler, "give Weigh a good talking to, will you? at that port died of the yellow fever, He didn't salute the old general the other day." Finally the corporal bugler communicated with Private Weigh. "Look here, funny face," said he, "if you don't salute old Pokerback next time you meet him, what-ho, young feller, you'll get a blooming

ETIQUETTE OF THE TELEPHONE.

Some Advice as to Use of Common clout on the ear 'ole!"

Instrument. How best to utilize the service of the telephone has led to a study of methods on the part of many large and some smaller business concerns, and not only has this resulted in a vast saving of time, but a certain "etiquette of the telephone" has been established which has a tendency to obviate many annoyances and to smooth over the rough places and soothe the nerves and the temper of many sensitive souls.

The telephone becomes a nuisance when it is abused and when persons at either end indulge in protracted or senseless repetitions of "Hello!" "Who is this?" and the like, says an exchange.

How much better and more businesslike in answering the telephone to abolish the senseless and rude salutation, "Hello!" and to at once give the name of the firm. For instance. "This is the First National Bank," "this is Mr. Brown's residence," and how much more satisfactory to the calling party, conveying to him, as it does, the knowledge that he has the right party. or if the wrong one the lack of excuse for useless talk, which monopolizes the circuit to the exclusion of more important business. By the universal adoption of such a rule less confusion would arise and "Central's" and the subscribers' nerves would remain in a better condition.

"Central" is blamed for much, almost everything, but a little assistance and patient co-operation on the part of the subscriber would go a long way toward improving the service, something which the telephone company is constantly striving to ef-

The person at the telephone should be prepared, instantly the operator responds, to give the number wanted, not from memory unless recently refreshed by reference to the directory or, if a long distance call, the name of the party wanted, together with the proper address. To be unprepared to give such information is almost inexcusable, and delay and frequently irritation is certain to follow,

Following are some of the rules of "Etiquette of the Telephone" which are laid down for the guidance of the thoughtful and politely disposed, which if more generally observed would not fail to make the telephone an even more popular institution than it now

Avoid telephoning to a private house too early in the morning or too late at night, or during meal hours, unless the case is urgent and will not brook delay.

Employes in a business office should never use the wire for protracted conversations with personal friends: this is a growing abuse and likely to inter-fore seriously with the business of the employer.

Do not forget that although you are not seen over a telephone wire, you are likely to be overheard, so don't shout out your private affairs so that others may be made familiar with

Cultivate speaking in well-modulated tones, as these carry the best and produce the most gratifying results at the distant station. Don't lose your temper and thus shame yourself and bring distress to others. When answering the telephone, give your name, or the name of the house or person whom you represent, instead of saying "Hello!"

EAT RATTLESNAKES IN BOLIVIA.

German Jurist Tells of His Experiences in South America.

Dr. Hermann Gans, first judge of the criminal courts of Frankfort-on-Main, Germany, is in Mexico City on a trip around the world. He is at the Palace Hotel and expressed his overwhelming delight yesterday at being back in civilization after a trip along the west coast of South America.

"Some years ago I made an extensive trip over the United States of America," he said to a Mexican Herald reporter. "If my duties did not keep me in Germany I would certainly live in the United States. Mexico is the nearest proposition to civilization I have met since leaving Europe. In fact, I consider is at least the doorway to the United States, and much like it when it comes to comforts."

"On arriving in Mexico City I stepped upon the first asphaltum, or decently paved streets, since leaving Buenos Ayres. Yet in comparison with Mexico City Buenos Ayres is filthy, inconvenient and dirty. Mexico City is not to be compared to anything in South America.

"The west coast country is not fit to live in. Bolivia, which is immensely wealthy in mines and natural resources, was the worst proposition I struck in my travels. I went over much of it on muleback.

"There is no bread in the interior and no meat of any kind known to civilized people. I stopped at one magnificent castle of a wealthy haciendado in the interior, where every effort was made to treat me royally. The meat upon the table resembled fish, and I was so surprised at seeing fish so far in the interior that I asked how they could have it there. It was explained that the fish was intended for Sunday, but that my arrival had caused them to serve it at midweek. It was not fish at all, but an enormous rattlesnake. I learned that rattlesnakes were choice food there. Boa constrictor is considered fairly good, but it does not come up to rattlesnake. Did I like it? You mean to ask did I taste it. Well, rattlesnake may be all right, but I do not know any more about how it goes as food than I did before.

"Bubonic plague, typhus and yellow fever rage continuously at Guayaguil. Every sailor on one German vessel and while I was there another vessel arrived with a new crew for it. Filth is no name for conditions on the west coast of South America. The whole country needs a general and civic laundry process." Judge Gans will go from Mexico City to San Francisco and thence to the Pacific islands, Samoa, Japan and India. He has a year's leave of absence. In his trunk he has brought a large assortment of boa constrictor, rattlesnake and other reptile skins as trophies of his South American trip, the flesh of most of which he said was served as special dishes at banquets and smart dinners. Referring to the matter of diet in Bolivia, Judge Gans said that a species of rat is the nearest he met with in the flesh line to real meat.

WHY SO MANY DESERTED FARMS

Immigrants Bunch in the Cities Instend of Becoming Land Workers. The country is filling up with immigrants, but it is a fact that they are not going on the land. It is also a fact that some of our best farmers, by the tens of thousands every year, are leaving us to take up homesteads in the Canadian Northwest. We have more mouths to fill, but we are not producing food for them in sufficient additional quantity to keep up with the increase in their number. That is the reason why wheat is high. It is the main reason why beef is high. It is a big factor in the "increased cost of living," of which our wives have evidence every day.

Good land is going out of cultivation, and farm labor is scarce everywhere, notably in this State. The reason for it is not entirely economic. The drift to the cities is not explained by the claim that a better living is to be made there. In the country the job is hunting the man. In the city the man is hunting the job, and not always finding it. The immigrant of one and two generations ago settled on the land and raised wheat and corn and beef, insuring a cheap and plentiful supply. The immigrant of to-day settles in the cities and consumes wheat and corn and beef, diminishing the supply and raising the price. He does so not because it is less profitable to till the soil, for its produce commands higher prices than ever before, but be suse he is of a different stock than his predecessor. He stays in the seaport cities because others of his race have made foreign "quarters" there, because of his own inertia, because this country has never made proper efforts to bring the landless man and the mauless land together.-New York

Red Was Reminiscent. "Why is that haughty Miss Labur-num so prejudiced against everything 'ed?" "Don't you know? Her father made als fortune selling circus lemonade."-Cleveland Plain Dealer.

There is more or less moonshine in the astrology business.

People who admire us are always pleasant company.