Twenty-Ninth Annual Reunion

TWENTY-EIGHT years ago last Tuesday, August 26, 1882, the first move was made in the permanent organization of the Pioneers and Old Settlers Association of Dakota County, Nebraska. A meeting was called for that day at Homer, Nebr., for the purpose of organizing an old settlers association. The call was signed by Geo. T. Woods of this place, who afterwards served as president of the association for two years. At this meeting Geo. T. Woods served as chairman and M. M. Warner secretary. Thus was the existence of the association formed, and a date set for the first annual reunion—Saturday, September 23, 1882, at Col. Baird's grove, a couple of miles northwest of Homer. Many of those sturdy pioneers who helped organize and took prominent parts in the early meetings of the association have "crossed the divide," still many remain who will be pleased to meet you and your friends at their Twenty-ninth Annual Reunion and Picnic at Clinton Park, Dakota City, Nebraska, Thursday, August 25, 1910.

"DECLINED WITH THANKS"

Famous Books That Had a Hard Time Getting Into Print.
Zangwill once offered a poem to an American magazine which the editor spurned. Years passed and brought changes. Then the editor wrote and asked the poet to favor him with a poem and name his own price. Zangwill laughed, produced the despised poem and received a substantial check—a very substantial check.

"Robinson Crusoe" begged at nearly every publisher's door, only to be turned away. When at last it was "Printed for W. Taylor, at the Sign of the Ship, in Paternoster row," it netted the lucky publisher £100,000 profit.

Jane Austen ranked toward the top of English women novelists, sold "Northanger Abbey" to a publisher at Bath for £10. The publisher then feared failure and kept the manuscript a long time before he mustered courage to launch it; it at once jumped in to enormous popularity.

Thackeray tried "Vanity Fair" with so many publishers only to meet with rebuffs that he at length ran it as a serial in Colburn's Magazine; it was the best he could do with it.

Every publisher in Copenhagen rejected the manuscript of the first volume of Hans Andersen's "Fairy Tales." When eventually he was compelled to bring out the volume at his own expense it jumped into immediate popularity, and the publishers, paying nothing for it, are still making money out of it as a classic.

Parker, the Oxford publisher, declined to give £20 to Keble for his "Christian Year." During the forty years which followed its eventual publication 400,000 copies were sold and Keble made £14,000, one-fourth of the retail price.

No publisher was found to accept "The Professor," the first novel of Charlotte Bronte, the highly successful novelist.

John Murray, the publisher, returned the manuscript of "Sartor Resartus" to Carlyle with a courteous note stating that he had not time to read it. Fraser offered to print it if Carlyle would pay him £150. Bentley and Colburn would have none of it. Finally Fraser let it run serially in his magazine, paying in all for it £32 1s.

Since he could not find a publisher in London that would give him £50 for the manuscript of his "Tristram Shandy," Lawrence Sterne issued it himself, so that publishers are still profiting from it after the centuries.

After "Uncle Tom's Cabin" had run through its magazine form a publisher's reader pronounced it of insufficient interest to print as a book. However, the publisher's wife advocated its publication, and in four years it had sold $13,000 copies in America alone.

Warning to Movers.
Feeling that the "moving" season is approaching, Director Neff of the department of health and charities has given some advice in the form of a bulletin, that if followed, may go far toward conserving the health of the community.

This advice is directed to families about to enter a recently unoccupied house, according to the Philadelphia Bulletin. Dr. Neff says that the germs of disease, especially consumption, may live for a long time in an unoccupied house. Here are some of the points of advice that the health director makes:

Do not move into the new home unless it has been fumigated, unless you know that it has been free from contagious disease. In case of doubt ask the bureau of health, who should have record of each house where any contagious disease has existed.

"See that the cellar is dry and properly ventilated and that the drainage and plumbing are not defective.

"Run off accumulated water from all pipes before using for domestic purposes.

"Dust is germ-laden and when dry sweeping is employed the dust is swept from the floor, arises in the air and according to the laws of gravitation, again falls upon the floor and the furniture. Use a damp cloth over the broom or moisten the broom itself—better still for those financially able, use a portable vacuum cleaner."

In the Near Future.
Father's in his strait
Gone to spend the day,
Looking after loans and bonds
In Europe, o'er the way.
Mother, who likes comfort,
And does not care to roam,
Is shopping via wireless,
In Paris, at her home.

Brother, who in deep seas
Has a coral grove,
Is going in his submarine
Among his fishes to rove.
Uncle, in the navy,
Who's left his ship a span,
Is shooting through pneumatic tubes
To join her in Japan.

Sister, who's a suffragette,
Has worked reforms so rare
That even the ward meetings
They open now with prayer.
And when, tired by their labors,
She'd body rest and soul,
She goes to spend for pleasure
A week end at the pole.

The Proper Place to Look.
During the moving, a portrait of one of the ancestors of the Brent family had got lost. No one could find it at either the old or the new house, and there was great consternation. William Brent, aged 5, was offered a "treat," value not announced, for any hint that would lead to the return of the missing grandfather.

One noon he came home from school breathless.

"I think, mama," he said, "I think we can find Grandfather Brent's picture."

"Where?" asked his mother.

"Downtown," said William, confidently. "I saw a notice on a shop window, and it said 'Paintings restored within.'"

Her Vanity.
"Why does she think he has such a splendid future?"

"Because she has promised to marry him, I suppose."—Houston Post.
