Brought Bankers to Time

In Which He Routed Financiers Who Were Selfish and Grasping.

About a year before William Windom, who had been United States senator from Minnesota and secretary of the treasury in President Garfield's cabinet, returned to public life at the head of the treasury department in President Harrison's first cabinet in 1889, I met him in the office of a common friend. By chance the conversation turned upon some of the incidents associated with Mr. Windom's brief service in General Garneld's

"Senator," I said, "I have always been anxious to know how it happened that you hit upon the precise plan by which you confounded and put to rout many of the great banks and bankers of the United States in the late spring of 1881?"

The senator laughed heartily, "Why," he said, "that plan was due entirely to one of those curious chances, these accidental discoveries, out of which sometimes great triumphs

"You may remember that the congress which sat in the last months of President Hays's administration passed an act authorizing the secretary of the treasury to refund a very large issue of bonds which bore five per cent, interest with a new issue bearing only three and a half per cent. It was legislation that caused the bankers of the country to be very much put out. They wanted the refunding bonds to bear at least four per cent, interest and, if possible, four and a half per cent., and because they did not get what they wanted they began to they surrendered about thirty millions superior," once said to me the parent intention of the bankers to sell Consequently, President Hayes, not desiring to have the money market greatly upset and the bonds probably death of the cardinal.

William Windom's Story of the Way gress not in session, I suddenly recalled a remark by John Sherman, when he was senator, to the effect that the discretionary powers of the secretary of the treasury were much larger than was generally believed to be the fact. Immediately, I determined to find out whether or not 1 could exercise any discretionary powers with the five per cent, bonds.

"The next day I hunted up the atorney general, Wayne MacVeagh, 'Mac,' I said, 'I wish you'd look into the law and tell me whether I can extend the five per cent, bonds at a less rate of interest than they now bear without any especial authority from congress,-in other words, whether I have any discretionary power in the matter?' MacVeagh saw the point at once, and a day or two thereafter told me that I surely had the discretionary power.

"The rest was easy. I caused it to be announced that I intended to begin of three million dollars a month. The paying off the five per cent, bonds at the rate of ten million dollars a month, and by lot, so that no one would know when he would be called upon to part | ment into letting them have their with his holdings. And I added that if any holder of bonds was willing that they should be extended at the rate of three per cent., and would permit such an agreement to be stamped upon the face of the bonds, why, then, the bonds would not be liable to immediate redemption.

"Now, you know the banks must have government bonds in order to have circulation and the bankers, quick to see that I had them, fairly tumbled over one another in their eagerness to have their five per cent. bonds extended at three per cent., or at a rate one-half of one per cent. lower than they could have obtained had they not frightened President Hayes into vetoing the bill authorizing the treasury department to refund the five per cent, with three and a half per cent, bonds.

"It was truly laughable, and, do you know, practically all of the five per cent, bonds were refunded in this manner, and all because of that happy chance thought of mine. And as a finishing touch to the complete rout of the bankers, congress, at its next session, passed a law forbidding the banks to surrender currency in excess banks could no longer dump their circulation into the United States treasury in order to frighten the governway."
