MUST VACCINATE PIGS

Pigs from immunce sows are not lways free from the liability of having cholera, according to the department of animal pathology at the University Farm. Some litters may be farrowed in infected pens and go past weaning time without becoming infected, while others get cholera within two or three weeks after farrowing. The pigs should be closely watched and if any show signs of cholera they should be giv-en serum alone. This will usually carry them well past weaning time when they can be given the simul-taneous treatment. If the herd ns to be extraordinarily susceptible to cholera, however, it will be necessary to give the serum alone more than once in order to carry them several weeks past weaning.

Pigs given the simultaneous treatment soon after weaning sometimes lose this protection within a few months. To acquire a long time immunity, pigs should weigh at least 50 or 60 pounds at the time of receiving the simultaneous treat-ment. At this weight the immunity usually lasts the ordinary lifetime of the hog, altho in some instances hogs that have proved positively immune at 125 pounds have later developed cholera.
