Lincoln State Journal, 14: George W. Leamer, county attorney of Dakota county, must submit to a recount of the ballots cast at the last election, the canvass of which gave him the election by thirteen votes. His opponent, Sidney T. Frum, brought a contest alleging that votes were counted for Leamer that were blank and also that were actually for Frum. The county court refused to open the ballots and recount them to see if this was correct, on the ground that they could not be received in evidence until proof had been introduced preliminary thereto that would show error or mistake. The district court held the same way. The supreme court held that while the courts are loth to favor contests merely brought to satisfy a candidate's curiosity and that there are contrary decisions, Frum cannot be required to first prove his charges before he can look at the ballots. It says: "In a proceeding under the Nebraska statutes to contest an election on the ground that sufficient votes to change the result were illegally counted for contestee, the contestant may introduce in evidence the properly preserved ballots themselves without first making proof of the charges in his complaint, facts stating that ground being alleged in specific terms."

Soldier's Letter

From Will Rhody, to his mother, Mrs. Lewis Cooley, of Wakefield. Fort Riley, Kans., Sept. 26, 1917: Dear Mother: Well I will answer your letter I received this morning. I am out of the hospital again feeling pretty good. Was down to Camp Funston Sunday and saw the boys, Harry Hindricks, Harry Bressler, John Anderson (Geo. Anderson's brother), and others from Ponca, Concord, and Wayne, and my cousin, Ed Harris, of Homer.

It sure seemed good to see some one I knew from home. I suppose after the next call, October 5, I will see the rest of them and I sure will look them up. They all seem happy and like the life so far.

Well it is time to go to the stables so must close. Give my love to the folks and answer soon. Your Soldier Boy, Willie.

SPECIAL SESSION FOR FARM BOYS

Boys who stay at home to help harvest Nebraska's mammoth corn crop this fall are to be given an opportunity to take a special term of study at the University of Nebraska School of Agriculture, according to an announcement just made by the principal. The term will begin December 3 and will continue without intermission until April 26, the date regular students in school finish their work.

Regular classes in the school began October 12, three days vacation being allowed at Thanksgiving time, and two weeks at Christmas. The special classes for cornhuskers will proceed without interruption, except for the single holiday, Christmas day. Enough special classes will be opened to permit the carrying of a full schedule, and students will receive the usual full year credit granted to regular students of the school. Persons who wish to register in this course are requested to write the Principal, University Farm, Lincoln, not later than November 1, if possible.

LAMB FEEDING EXPERIMENT

A lamb-feeding experiment to check the results of two years work in fall feeding of lambs has just been begun by the animal husbandry section of the Nebraska experiment station. Three hundred 55-pound lambs have been put on feed to determine the economy of adding protein concentrates where they are fed on corn, and the economy of producing gains on grass supplemented by a small amount of corn. Four lots are allowed to range in the cornfield (one lot being clipped), one lot is on pasture, and three lots are fed in dry lot.

At the close of this experiment (some time in December), the annual Sheep Feeders' Day will be held at the University Farm. At this time lambs will be on exhibition, and the results of the feeding test will be announced and discussed.

HANDLING NEWLY PURCHASED LAMBS

Stockmen who purchase and ship lambs to their farms for fall feeding not infrequently suffer loss after shipment, a loss that is at least partially due to sudden change of feed, says the animal husbandry section of the Nebraska Experiment Station. Most western lambs have been in transit for at least a week and their digestive systems are weakened materially.

It is well to allow the lambs plenty of blue grass. If they are to be turned into a corn field, they should have their appetite well curbed before turning them into the field each day, at the start. Fodder may be fed several days before turning in. It would be well to have a grass pasture available and also have alfalfa in racks. A little alfalfa hay where western lambs can have access to it at all times is a splendid and economical means of starting them on their winter feed.

POULTRY HOUSE WHITEWASH

A whitewash that disinfects, kills mites, and brightens the poultry house is made as follows: Slack 5 quarts of rock lime with hot water to about the consistency of cream. To this, add one pint of crude carbolic acid or zenoleum, and 1 quart of kerosene. Stir thoroly, and dilute with twice its own volume of water. Apply with either spray pump or whitewash brush. When properly prepared, this solution serves three purposes: The zenoleum acts as a disinfectant, killing the germs; the kerosene penetrates the wood, destroying the mites; and the lime whitens the walls, making the building sweet and light.

BEDTIME FOR STRAWBERRIES

It's time to put your strawberries to bed for the winter in a heavy blanket of straw just as soon as the ground is frozen hard enough to bear the weight of a wagon, say horticulturists at the University Farm. Coarse straw or very coarse, weed-free hay makes the best winter wrap for these plants. Manure is likely to heat and thus injure them. Fine material of any kind will smother them out.

HOUSING MACHINERY PAYS

Meet the rising price of machinery by making every machine last longer—this is an "economy suggestion" from the agricultural engineering department of the University of Nebraska. The life of a machine may be greatly lengthened by providing proper shelter, adjusting parts for wear, lubricating freely, and making prompt repairs.
