Persons on the shore heard him call for help and started out to rescue him. He went down and never came up again. He was a good swimmer. The search for the body was started by divers from Saunders beach. As this did not prove effective, the police were called, and they continued the search by using grappling hooks. The drowning occurred at 11 o'clock yesterday morning. At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the boy's body was recovered from a moss bed near eight feet in depth and under fourteen feet of water. Councilman

On Their Way to Nebraska's Victory State Fair, Lincoln, Aug. 31 to Sept. 5, 1919.

Mann and Policemen Albert Luke, Brown, Green and N. V. Luke hauled in tons of moss before the body was recovered with grappling hooks. Coroner Dickinson took charge of the body. The boy was an expert swimmer, but the extremely cold temperature of the water at the point where he went down caused cramps. The Boy Scout camp, which the lad was attending, came to a sudden end following the drowning. The camp was established early yesterday morning, and but a few of the boys and none of the leaders were there when the Beach and Darling boys went in swimming. Scout leaders struck camp late yesterday afternoon and the scouts returned to the city. Paul was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Beach. He was a Boy Scout, and one of the most energetic in the organization. He was a first class scout, having attained that rank in one year. According to those connected with the Boy Scout work, Paul was one of the most enthusiastic in carrying on the war work campaign of the Boy Scouts. Paul had been working as office boy for the Sioux City Gas and Electric company during the summer months.

It seems late in the season to mention removing the males from your poultry flock so as to produce infertile eggs. However, it has been discovered that some have neglected to do this. This oversight is what has caused the loss of $15,000,000 or more each year, directly due to fertile eggs.

The fertile eggs, when exposed to high summer temperatures, will undergo chick development, just as they would when placed in an incubator or under a hen.

Infertile eggs will not undergo chick development and you will get just as many eggs as though a male was in your flock.

If you continue to keep the males in your flock, don't complain of your merchant when some of your eggs are returned. The merchant cannot afford to buy these eggs because they would be a total loss to them. Produce infertile eggs and create a demand for the sale of your eggs.

It is impossible to lay down any set rules as to just which cockerels to caponize, but it is safe to say that it is more profitable, in most cases, to sell the early hatched cockerels as broilers. Early hatched capons are often ready for market before the demand and high price for capons is high. The capon is in greatest demand at highest prices between Christmas and Easter. The exact time varies with different markets.

The later hatched cockerels, which are not ready for market as broilers before the price of broilers drop, may be caponized and carried over until winter and marketed as capons. Thus there seems to be a greater advantage in making capons of late hatched cockerels than of the early ones.

Young Hens Lay Best

It seldom pays to keep hens for laying after they are more than two and a half years old, say University extension poultrymen. This may not be true of Leghorns, but is generally so of most other breeds. Hens older than this may return some profit, but younger hens will return greater profit. In this day of high feed prices, flocks must be culled of the non-layers and poor layers and only those kept which produce the most profit.

St. Michael's Picnic Draws Big Crowd

Several thousand people assembled at Crystal lake last Friday and enjoyed the festivities of the day, given under the auspices and management of St. Michael's Catholic church of South Sioux City. A program of music, singing and speaking was given after the noon hour, in the dance pavilion on the west bank of the lake.

The program was opened with selections by the Brown Family Orchestra, which won repeated applause from the audience. Solos by Miss Mary Duggan of Goodwin, Miss Rose Hartnett and Mrs. Jas. Finnell of Jackson, and a duet by Misses Agnes Cahill and Lucile Sherwood of South Sioux City, were very pleasing and the performers were repeatedly encouraged.

Rev. Fr. E. Zeph of Hubbard, gave a short address in which he emphasized the need for a dual education in our schools. Not only is it essential that we train and discipline the minds of our youths, he stated, but we must go further, and build better than that; we must give them a spiritual education such that they will hold before them always ideals that will force our nation further ahead in the race for civilization than she has already been. Civilization has always moved westward. Starting with Egypt, it tarried for a short time in Greece, moved to Rome and has now arrived within the doors of our country. Whether it will remain here or move on is a question which lies in our hands. The only solution that will give satisfactory results is to take more special care in the rearing and educating of our children. Many people have been inclined to look at our religious life as an appendix, and as non-essential. But this is a mistake. Our religious life is the fundamental on which our whole social existence is based. Intelligence and religion are responsible for our country's welfare.

Congressman R. E. Evans made an interesting address on "The League of Nations," and explained many points in the league pact that are now being contested before congress, and in which many of his hearers were in the dark, so to speak.

In his address on the subject: "The League of Nations," Mr. Evans stated that he is emphatically opposed to the League of Nations as it now stands and that the only features which would redeem it as practical are the reservations suggested by Hughes and Taft, viz., the right for the United States to declare when it has fulfilled its obligations, a right which it does not now possess under the present reading of the treaty, and the right to withdraw absolutely from the international disagreement now under observation.

Mr. Evans is more than strenuously opposed to the approaching centralization of power, which he claims the present system and the program outlined under the league of nations pact is leading to. It is a recognized fact, he stated, that in the time of war or national danger, the only safe and sane method of functioning is that of an absolute monarchy. For that reason, during the period of national peril, we delegated to our president those powers which would enable him to carry out his program unhampered. But the trouble with the delegation of the great power to any executive is that when the period of stress has passed he resents the curtailment of that power.

"France, England, Italy and Japan, although tied to us by certain political motives, would never hesitate, said Mr. Evans, to throttle us by the stipulations contained in article 10 of the league of nations pact, if the opportunity arrived. Article 10 states that after such time as a nation has declared the strength of her standing army, it requires the sanction of the council, which includes the above mentioned countries, to raise that strength to larger numbers, and that the standing army shall be of only such strength as to enable any country to provide for the care of her interests and to protect herself from any foreign interference.

"Now, in the case of Mexico, should we find it necessary to send troops into that place, it would require a force greatly in excess of the 300,000 men allowed the country by congress as our standing army to be of any value. Then it would be necessary, according to the agreement, to ask the permission of France, England, Italy and Japan before we were justified in taking any such steps. Only six years ago, in our struggle to maintain a union, without the selfish interests of Russia in our behalf, England would have intervened in the hope of spoiling our country. At the present time, our troops in France are becoming disillusioned as to the altruistic motives of France; in Italy our troops are hissed and the American is unpopular; our soldiers have been entangled in riots with the Japanese civilians and soldiers. These nations have shown their true feelings time and time again. Why should we lay ourselves liable to any attack of a political nature they may care to impose on us?"

Article 8 of the league of nations pact declares that in order to grant a request or concession not only a majority of the council is required, but it must be unanimous. This, declares Mr. Evans in regard to our relations with Mexico, would be preposterous.

A ball game between the Homer and Rosalie teams was the principal feature of the afternoon sports, and was won by Homer, 4 to 2. Homer also defeated the Martinsburg team, by a 7 to 2 score, and carried off the purse money of $100 on the two games.

To Determine Cost of Producing Wheat

What the price of wheat should be in order that growers have a fair profit is to be determined in at least three counties of Nebraska next year. The farm bureau of Gage, Seward and Polk counties have obtained from the University Department of Rural Economics blanks to keep a complete record of production costs. Twenty-five of these records will be kept in each county, a sufficient number to accurately determine the cost of growing wheat. By adding a fair profit to this cost, the price which the farmer should have for his wheat can be determined. At present various figures are given for producing wheat, no accurate record having been made. These three farm bureaus have decided to put an end to all argument regarding the price of wheat. They will be able to announce next year at this time just what it should be if the producers are to make a profit. The cost of raising corn and hogs is being determined in ten counties this year.

M. E. Church Notes

Rev. S. A. Draize, Pastor

Last Saturday and Sunday was the occasion of the fourth quarterly conference meeting. The Rev. E. M. Furman, district superintendent, of Norfolk district, was on the charge for the purpose of looking over the work of the past year and helping to plan for next year's work. The first service was held Saturday evening at Homer. An enthusiastic crowd was out and a splendid conference was had. Nearly every member of the official board was present. All reports were on hand and showed everything up to date. They will have a good report to the annual conference this year. The church at Homer is quite anxious to reach the ability to have a resident pastor. It is the only town in the county that has no resident preacher of any kind.

The Sunday morning service was very helpful. Rev. Furman was at his best and delivered a great sermon. His text was Heb. 11-13. The theme—Two strains of human thinking and action—Immediacy and Eternity. He showed that the unrest and strife of the present is caused by the desire and not the need of the present. Folks just want things and in many cases just because some one else has it. And in their desire they forget that anyone else has any rights in the same world. The great majority are living in the immediate desire, and are only planning for the day and hour in which they live. Only when men realize that they are living for eternity will they become thoughtful and careful of their influence and example and conduct among their fellowmen.

It was a great sermon, and it was a disappointment that the church was not filled with hearers. The folks who stayed away from church last Sunday missed a helpful service. They have missed them at other times also.

Next Sunday will be communion day.
