GOODWIN STATE BANK

GOODWIN, NEBRASKA
"Everything in Banking"

Wakefield, of Sioux City, will occur Saturday afternoon, October 16, in the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Martha Herrick, of Long Beach, Cal. Miss Herrick is a former student of Morningside college and a graduate of the University of Nebraska.

Laurel Advocate: H. A. McCormick, former publisher of the Wynot Tribune, who moved to Florence a year ago, was a caller at this office Friday in company with C. P. Johnson of Omaha. Mr. McCormick stated that he expects to again assume the responsibilities of the Tribune at Wynot about the 15th, and when here was on his way there to secure household accommodations for his family. Mr. McCormick sold his home in Florence to C. P. Johnson, who will move into the same as soon as vacated by the former. Mr. Johnson was looking after his place north of Laurel, driving up from Omaha. Mr. McCormick accompanied him here and going on to Wynot. While at Florence Mr. McCormick tried his hand at gardening and a little farming, and said he does not know when he enjoyed a summer as he has this one. He has two boys at home, the younger of whom will remain in Omaha and attend high school, and the other will come to Wynot and work in the office. E. L. Pratt, who has had charge of the Tribune the past year, has made a success of it, but he has not announced what move he will make when he lays down the management of the office—but we'll bet he doesn't stay out of the business.

"Home Storage of Vegetables," United States department of agriculture farmers' bulletin 879, gives suggestions for the storing of all kinds of vegetables, such as beets, carrots, parsnips, cabbage, celery, potatoes, pumpkins, squashes, turnips, apples, etc. The storage of potatoes, especially in western Nebraska, is discussed in a State college of agriculture circular called "Farm Storage of Potatoes in Western Nebraska." Both publications may be obtained free from the college of agriculture.

The Herald's Letter Box

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 3, 1920.

Dear Brother: I thought I would give you a brief description of some of the sights I have seen in the short time I have been in Los Angeles. I can't tell you all, as it would make a book larger than Webster's dictionary. Well, last Sunday, October 3, Cliff and I went down to San Pedro harbor to see the wonderful battle ships. The fleet came into San Pedro harbor last Friday. Each ship has its own motor boats, and they come to shore and take people out to the ships and bring them back free of charge. They were anchored out about six miles from the harbor. The motor boat we went out in was about 14 feet wide and 75 feet long, and carried about 100 people. When we got to the ship Idaho, which was the one we visited, the first thing we had to do was to climb a set of steps something like a fire escape, which was about 20 feet high, that landed us on the first deck. We walked from one end of the ship to the other, and believe me it was some canoe. On this deck were the 14 inch guns, about 50 feet long. Then we went on up to the top of the ship, I think about three more decks, and after looking it all over and seeing the amount of iron and steel in the blooming thing I really wondered how it stayed on top of the water, but they do. They won't let anyone go down in the lower part of the ship. I suppose on account of danger. There are a lot of sailors on board one of these ships, and all seem to be doing something. Some were scrubbing the decks, some were playing cards and some dancing to the music of a phonograph. By this time it was 3 o'clock and we went back to shore, as we wanted to see the submarines which were over near shore. In this fleet there were sixteen ships, among them being the New York. We saw thirteen submarines, among them the German U 88, which has eighteen ships to her credit at the bottom of the sea. I suppose the German submarine is much larger than ours. It looked to me to be about 200 feet long. Coming back to the shore from the ships we saw a hydroplane rise off the water and fly around awhile and then light on the water. They can travel about as fast on the water as they can in the air. So when this was all over, here came a motor boat that travels something better than 50 miles per hour. It doesn't stay on the water all the time, it just touches the high places occasionally.

By this time it was 5 o'clock, so I said to Clifford I guess we have seen enough for one day, so we pulled out for Los Angeles. You talk about driveways—they are surely grand, in all the driving we have done (some 200 miles) we have never been on a dirt road yet. All the roads are paved in some way, no matter where you go. You sure have some comfort driving a car here. Another thing I wish to speak about, and that is the climate. We have been here almost a month and every day has been just alike. It is getting late in the season, and every morning when I get up I look out of the window to see how much snow there is on the ground, but I haven't seen any yet. It seems kind of natural for me to be looking for some darned mean thing to happen, after living at the north pole for so long.

Well, it is getting about time to eat, so will close for the present, and will give you a description of some of my other trips later.

Yours truly,
M. M. Ream.

Fur Prices High

On account of the extraordinarily high price of furs quite a number of Nebraska farmers and others found a profitable sideline in trapping during the last two or three winters. The supply of all kinds of furs has been decreasing at a rapid rate in the last few years, with corresponding high prices offered. There is no longer any virgin trapping ground left. Even in Alaska the two most important fur-bearing animals, the beaver and the marten, have become so nearly exterminated that they are now being protected by a close season. A summary of Nebraska laws relating to open seasons is given in United States department of agriculture farmers' bulletin 1165 as follows: Open seasons for muskrat, otter, mink, raccoon, opossum, November 1 to February 1. Beaver, no open season. Other fur animals, unprotected. All fur animals except beaver may be taken at any time when necessary for the protection of property. Beaver damaging property may be killed on one's own land under a permit from the chief deputy game and fish commissioner. Counties that have voted at any general election to pay bounties may pay as follows: Wolf, $6; coyote, $3; wildcat, $1; mountain lion, $3.
