Began Long Ago.
A supporter of the democratic ticket in the last election writes to the New York World to ask this question:

"What do the republicans intend doing with the vast governmental powers soon to be in their control in an epoch of falling prices, falling wages, falling government revenues, high interest rates, reduced markets at home and abroad, factory shut-downs, surplus labor and increasing numbers of men out of work, etc., etc.?"

Now, for history's sake, let us record that this question was asked on November 6th, four days after election. The falling prices, falling wages, high interest rates, etc., had been on the way for several months and had reached such a stage by election time as to impress this democrat with the idea that the republicans face an almost super-human task. And they do. The republican party will take charge of the government at a time when every condition and circumstance is adverse. It will require constructive statesmanship of the highest order to rescue the United States from the chaos into which it has been drawn by eight years of democratic rule.

But we should be thankful to a democratic paper for publishing the communication of a democrat, admitting that the conditions existed four days after election. The country could not have been reduced to such a condition in four days, hence the long list of evils must have been brought on before the result of the election was known.

The Herald's Letter Box

Exciting Times in Santa Rosa, Cal.
Santa Rosa, Cal., December 11, 1920
Mr. John H. Ream,
Dear Friend: We will write you a few lines to let you know what kind of exciting times we are having in Santa Rosa. I suppose you have read it in the papers, for it is so terrible it will go world-wide.
I am sending you the Santa Rosa papers and San Francisco paper, which tells all about the lynching of the three gangsters who killed our noble sheriff and two San Francisco detectives, which was so terrible, in its being so uncalculated and cold-blooded, that it aroused all California, and ended as I have told you above.
The district attorney, who was prosecuting the case, Mr. Geo. W. Hoyle, is Mrs. Bliven's own cousin.
We have sold our farm and moved to town on account of school advantages, as Adeline is in high school.
We are also the happy grandparents of a grandson, born to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilson. Mrs. Wilson was formerly Miss Blanche Bliven. We are, of course, very proud of him.
Will close, hoping you have a very Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year, and the same to all our friends back there.
Theodore E. Bliven and Family.
