Rev. Geo. J. McClellan, who has been at Vale, S. D., engaged in a series of revival meetings, under the direction of the Church Extension Board of Nebraska Yearly Meeting of Friends, during the past several weeks, returned home Friday of last week.

Notwithstanding the very stormy and cold weather prevalent in the Black Hills country, a very successful series of revival meetings were held. The meetings resulted in sixteen conversions; eleven backsliders reclaimed, and scores of Christians of different denominations were deepened, and are now co-operating together for more efficient Christian work in that great and needy field.

The meetings were held in the beautiful irrigated Belle Fourche valley, a thickly inhabited valley of very excellent people. Beginning at the edge of this valley and covering an area of near 100 miles east and near that distance north and south, is a vast area known as the "Adobe hills and Plains."

This section, far away from civilization, is inhabited by people of different nationalities: Americans, Indians, Russians, Finns, etc. Rev. McClellan found that in all this vast area there were no churches, no Sunday schools, no religious instruction whatever. He also found many young people, some who had reached the age of fourteen years who had never heard of Jesus Christ.

Hearing of the great revival meeting over in the valley, the people of the hills and plains country sent for him to come over and preach for them. This plan was to have been carried out, but the storm came on and the extreme cold weather closed up the work for the winter.

A young man from this section was converted, and he has a great concern for his people. He said to Rev. McClellan, "I want you to go over to our school house and preach for us, my parents never heard a real sermon in their lives. This is a challenge to the Christian church of America. So called 'Christian America' and people at our very doors who never heard of our Christ! If the meetings could have continued two weeks longer scores of people would have been converted."
