The many friends of Dan Rasdal will be pleased to learn that he is improving rapidly at the Army hospital at St. Louis. He was able to sit up last Sunday for the first time since his operation.

Sioux City Tribune, 3: Seven hundred dollars worth of jewelry was the loot obtained by thieves who on Thursday night gained entrance to the Brasfield & Jensen drug store at Homer, Neb. The thieves tore open a door in the rear of the store which led to the coal chute.

It is believed they slid down the coal chute and ascended the stairs to the main part of the store. The loot consisted of several valuable watches, rings, cameras and several chests of silverware.

A large safe, containing a large portion of the day's receipts, was standing in a back room of the store and was moved to the front of the establishment, where the thieves attempted to pry the door loose. They failed, however, and the safe was found lying on its side by Ray Winch, a clerk, as he opened the doors for business Friday morning.

The thieves, after selecting the most valuable articles, are believed to have escaped through a rear door and left the town in an automobile. Sioux City police and other surrounding towns were notified. No trace of the thieves has been found.

Emerson Enterprise: Mrs. Lillian McLaughlin, of Fonda, Iowa, is here looking after Mrs. Holman who is reported to be quite ailing.

Mrs. E. C. Lenderink of Sioux City, spent the week-end in Emerson at the home of her sister, Mrs. Walter McLaughlin.

Word was received the first of the week from Ashton, Idaho, that the year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Isenberg, died last Saturday. A host of friends here will deeply sympathize with the bereaved parents.

Glen Dunlap, of Homer, was in Emerson on business Tuesday and made Latest Form of Loud Speaker for Addressing Public Gatherings.

Projecting the Human Voice Four Miles

By R. W. King

What is undoubtedly the loudest reproduction of the human voice on record was attained during a demonstration of a powerful "loud speaker," recently made in the Catskill Mountains. This loud speaker is designed primarily for addressing very large public gatherings. It is more powerful, but otherwise very similar, to the "loud speaker" which President Harding used in his inaugural address, at which his voice was heard with the greatest ease by a crowd of 125,000 persons, some of whom stood 700 feet from the speaker's stand.

The installation at Napanoch in the Catskills projected the voice .35 miles, and a simple computation shows that in the sector of this radius around the "loud speaker" the entire population of the United States could be placed without uncomfortable crowding. The demonstration showed that a speaker standing in front of the telephone transmitter, which ordinarily form a part of the "loud speaker," could have his voice projected over this great area, and also proved that the same magnification could be given the voice of a speaker 1,000 miles away, when he talked over a long distance telephone line connected directly to the amplifier of the device. The "loud speaker" in the Catskills was connected to the Bell long distance telephone circuit to Chicago, and the words spoken into the ordinary telephone transmitter in Chicago were clearly heard over this enormous area.

The loud speaker includes a telephone transmitter, an amplifier, and several large wooden horns or "sound projectors" supported by a low steel tower. Each projector is equipped at its small end with a very powerful telephone receiver for converting into sound waves the variable electric currents supplied it. The purpose of the amplifier is to magnify the very minute currents produced by the transmitter, which are then led to the receivers. The apparatus is the product of the research laboratory maintained by the Bell Telephone System. In this laboratory, which is the largest devoted to the application of science to human affairs, 2,800 persons are employed, and exhaustive studies of every technical question arising in the telephone art are made. It constitutes one of the very important agencies of the Bell System, to develop the art of telephony and maintain America's supremacy in speech communication.

The projecting of the human voice over the remarkable distance of nearly four miles was an accomplishment resulting from exact and painstaking scientific development. There was first required a telephone transmitter so perfect in its operation that it reproduced with absolute fidelity the complexed waves of the human voice in the form of electrical currents. In the second place, an amplifier was required which would magnify with equal accuracy the minute currents generated by the transmitter. Finally, the large telephone receivers attached to the sound projectors are of such skillful design that they reconvert magnified electrical currents into sound waves without the slightest distortion. In order that the sound waves produced by the projectors could be heard across the valley nearly four miles away, the amplifier magnified the electrical energy received from the telephone transmitter about 10,000,000,000 times, and this ten-billion fold amplification was produced without in any way destroying or distorting the original quality of the speaker's voice.

The "loud speaker" involves apparatus which is exactly similar in principle to the equipment of every long distance telephone line. Every long distance telephone circuit involves, among many other things, a transmitter, an amplifier and a receiver, and the successful design and maintenance of such circuits was necessarily preceded by very far-reaching studies of all the elements comprising the circuit. The loud speaker is, therefore, a natural by-product of the researches underlying long distance telephony.

this office a pleasant call. Mr. Dunlap conducts the big garage in Homer. He is also a very clever wrestler, and enjoys the game, too.

Miss Marie Molitor, who is attending school at Jackson, spent the Thanksgiving holiday at the home of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. E. Danielson. Ed Danielson, who is attending Wayne Normal, was also home with both feet under "Dad's" table.

Sioux City Journal, 6: Mrs. Clark Hiserote and daughter Hazel, of Homer, Neb., and Mrs. Joseph Chadamelka and daughter Gladys, of West Point, Neb., have arrived to attend the funeral services of their uncle, C. F. Martin, who died Saturday.

Improvement is noted in the condition of Miss Esther Leamer, who is seriously ill at Ames, Ia., according to her brother-in-law, Philip Gregory, who returned Sunday from Ames, where he was summoned a week ago.

Ponca items in Allen News: M. L. Mellon took six University students to Dakota City Sunday afternoon to take the train for Lincoln.

Farm Bureau Field Notes

C. R. Young, County Agent

The annual Farm Bureau meeting will be held at Dakota City, December 30th. Mr. J. N. Norton of Polk county, will be one of the principal speakers of the day. Mr. Norton served in our State Legislature and is now a member of the Executive Committee of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation. Further details of the meeting will appear later.

While the hog cholera situation in the county is not nearly so bad as during October, there are still several herds dying from the disease. During winter months, some farmers losing hogs from disease became very careless about destroying them. The law of this state says that they must be burned within twenty-four hours from death. This should be done without any exception, because to keep diseased animals on the premises is to harbor the disease and to jeopardize the neighbor's herd. Persons not fulfilling this part of the law should be reported at once to the Livestock Sanitary board.

Sell Your Immature Pullets

In nearly every farm flock there are many immature pullets that should be sold. That the average poultry house is about one-third as large as it should be for the number of hens kept, is the observation of poultry specialists of the College of Agriculture. Keeping the immature pullets with the hens increases the crowded condition, and decreases the number of eggs. In most cases table scraps are used as part of the food given to the flock. This food, which usually contains some meat, helps to increase egg production; but when it has to be divided with the pullets, there is not enough meat to go around and therefore little good is accomplished. In addition to the scraps, some sour milk is used. In many cases the hens, if kept alone, would receive sufficient protein to really increase in egg production. Immature pullets are wild and usually vicious. They keep the hens disturbed because they are very easily frightened and at the slightest pretense scatter in a panic. When hens have full red combs the pullets often pick them until they bleed freely. This habit is sometimes taken up by most of the birds and the flock is ruined by cannibalism. It is much cheaper to sell the small pullets now than to feed them all winter and perhaps get many weak chicks hatched from their eggs next spring when hatching eggs are collected without considering their origin.
