PLAIN PORK SAUSAGE The following recipe is recommended by the Nebraska Agricultural College. It is considered essential that the meat be salted in the proportions indicated, but the seasoning may be varied to suit the taste.

4 lbs lean pork trimmings, 5 level teaspoonfuls salt, 6 level teaspoonfuls powdered sage, 2 level teaspoonfuls white pepper, 1 level teaspoonful ground cloves, 1 level teaspoonful sugar, 1 level teaspoonful baking soda, 1/2 cup cold water.

The meat should be about one-fourth fat. As trimmed out by the enough man, however, there will be enough fat without adding any extra. Grind the trimmings. Spread out one-half the meat and sprinkle the seasoning on top. Place the other half of the meat above the seasoning; then grind again, thus thoroughly mixing the slices. Put the sausage in a pan and add the one-half cup of cold water. Mix and knead thoroughly with the hands until the sausage becomes very sticky and dough-like. The two grindings, the water and the kneading with the hands make it possible to slice the sausage and fry it without having it crumble. Stuff in casings or muslin, or pack tightly in a granite pan or fry it down for future use.

This recipe will give a well seasoned sausage. The sage may be reduced to suit the taste.
