Why not insure your farm buildings now that winter is coming on? I am anxious to write your policy for you in a good substantial company. You want to deal with a home man on insurance for the reason that about half the companies are offering you policies the provisions of which you won't like. Insure now. K. L. Pierce, agent.

In an overland trip to Alliance last Friday the writer could not help noticing the improvements and trees at the home of Henry Von Bargen. He has planted his trees on a slope and has banked up the earth on the lower side of his grove in such a way that from every shower he gets all the moisture that the ground will hold. It surely makes a place more home like to have a grove of trees and there is no doubt but that they help in selling out.

The time to insure your live stock is in the fall of the year after you have sold off and reduced your bunch. The insurance I write covers your cattle at actual value up to $30 a head. You insure what you own now and you will be paid for all lost by fire or lightning up to the face of your policy at actual value, except when each head is worth more than the limit. $30.—K. L. Pierce, agent.

To the People:—Trade at Frohnappel's, where you get the most for your money. He has a new stock all the way through. Remember, he has no brothers in St. Louis to buy bankrupt and fire stocks. Frohnappel furnishes the potato trade with good flour, not an article shipped in for that trade. Frohnappel pays you for every bushel of potatoes in your load. He will also give you a dollar's worth for every dollar purchase. Any bill you pay once you never have to pay the second time. I want your trade and will treat you right and treat you so you will be glad to stay with me.—Norbert Frohnappel.

AUCTION—I will sell at public auction in Hemingford, Saturday, Oct. 29, 1904, at 2 o'clock, p. m., my household goods consisting of 2 beds, springs and mattresses, couch, dining and kitchen chairs, dining table, commoda, cupboard, heating and cook stoves, and other articles. Terms Cash. H. H. Funk, W. M. Fosket, Auctioneer.

The potato crop according to the government reports is 15 per cent better in the United States than it was last year and 16 per cent ahead of the 10 year average. A clipping below from a Michigan paper will show what the outlook is in the northwest.

"Michigan potatoes, like Michigan apples, will this year come into competition with large crops from other states. The crop promises well. The bulk of the late potatoes will be out of the way of blight and damage from the wet weather within two weeks. H. Elmer Moseley, in reviewing the situation, says the northwest has the largest potato crop for many years. In Minnesota the potatoes are being marketed at 15 cents per bushel; in Wisconsin, at 18 cents, because of the size of the crop and the fear of rot. Ohio and Pennsylvania have large crops, and the New England states, particularly Maine, are beginning an enormous harvest. The crop in New York state is the average. In competition with the low prices of the northwest, Michigan potatoes are being marketed at 25 and 30 cents for shipment. At the higher rate the shippers just about play even. Their profit they must get from stock bought at low prices."
