Making Children "Show Off."

Here is something with which few mothers will agree, and yet it is the opinion of one of the leading physicians of New York. Says this authority: "It is cruel for mothers to try to make their children be smart and show off before people when they are little. Above all things let a child be stupid—not only stupid, but ugly if it is allowed to be stupid and ugly when it is little and growing it will have a much better chance of becoming bright and beautiful. Little minds are overtaxed by being made to memorize verses to say before people, by being taught this, that and the other thing for showing off. Children should be left to grow up just what they are—little animals."—Good Housekeeping.

The Stranger Needed a Knife.

"I was traveling some months ago in the mountains of North Carolina," said Mr. J. P. Dickens of Boston, "and stopped at the log cabin of a farmer to get a little rest and a bite to eat. The farmer's wife was a kind-hearted soul and set about getting me a dinner with most hearty hospitality. At the table one of her children, a lad of 12, said to her in a loud tone: 'Maw, give the stranger a knife.' His mother answered that she had given me one, which was true, but again the youngster piped up: 'Maw, I tell you to give him a knife; don't you see he is eatin' his greens with a fork?'"—Washington Post.

Cure to Stay Cured.

Wapello, Iowa, Sept. 11th (Special)—One of the most remarkable cures ever recorded in Louisa County is that of Mrs. Minnie Hart of this place. Mrs. Hart was in bed for eight months and when she was able to sit up she was all drawn up on one side and could not walk across the room. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her. Speaking of her cure, Mrs. Hart says:

"Yes, Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me after I was in bed for eight months and I know the cure was complete for that was three years ago and I have not been down since. In four weeks from the time I started taking them I was able to make my garden. Nobody can know how thankful I am to be cured or how much I feel I owe to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

This case again points out how much the general health depends on the kidneys. Cure the kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills and nine-tenths of the suffering the human family is heir to, will disappear.

A Graceful Carriage.

A graceful carriage is as necessary to good health as to good looks. Certain exercises will do much for the woman who hasn't always cultivated the habit of standing and walking correctly, says the Brooklyn Times. A great aid in the development of a good position is to raise the crown of the head as high as possible and then try to make the chest meet the chin. This will make a graceful carriage smaller stomach, a fuller chest and more lung power. To reach either above the head as far as possible or to the floor without bending the knees will decrease the size of the waist and round it; also fill in the hollow in front of the arms.

When death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never our tenderness that we repent of, but our severity.—George Eliot.

The biggest willow in the state is at Norridgewock. It measures twenty-three feet in circumference at the base and has a ponderous spreading top. Its largest diameter is a little more than eight feet. The age of the tree is about 100 years. The tradition is that a man traveling from New Hampshire on horseback stopped to give the horse water there and stuck his whip, which was a small willow twig, in the ground and gorgot to take it.

GAVE UP CHANCE OF THRONE FOR LOVE

Prince Oscar

It was said at the recent marriage of Princess Margaret of Connaught to Prince Gustavus of Sweden. That it was one of those rare exceptions—a royal love match. Perhaps so, but there is no such proof of it as was furnished by the marriage of another Swedish prince in England seventeen years ago and under very different circumstances. Just because that was nothing but a love match, entirely of Cupid's making, no ceremonious fuss was made over it, and the European sovereigns all held aloof from it and did not even send wedding presents to the bride and bridegroom. Prince Oscar Carl Auguste, Duke of Gotland, second son of the king and queen of Sweden, was 25 years old when he fell in love with his mother's prettiest and favorite maid of honor, Miss Ebba de Munck. She was a scion of one of the oldest and most distinguished of Swedish families and could claim to have more blue blood in her veins than the descendant of the man whom Bonaparte had placed on the throne of Sweden. Prince Oscar told his father as much, but that did not soften the king's opposition. He insisted that his handsome son should wed only within the charmed circle of royalty, and be content with the pick of some half dozen pretty princesses. The course of true love never did run smooth for many a long day. Miss Munck herself refused to listen to the prince's suit and absolutely forbade him to make the sacrifice for her sake. She resigned her court appointment, and when she found that her royal lover was bent on following her to her father's house, she left home and entered a hospital to train as a nurse. But Oscar would not give her up. Rather would he lay aside all his titles and privileges that his royal birth conferred upon him. In his despair he turned to his mother for comfort and aid. Queen Sophie, herself a princess of Nassau, had her own prejudice to conquer—but she was greatly attached to her favorite maid of honor, and still more deeply, of course, did she love her son. He convinced her that he could never be happy as the husband of any other woman. The mother in her triumph over the queen. She sought out the hospital nurse and pleaded her son's cause—with success. To win the king's consent was more difficult task. Finally, when she was about to undergo a serious operation which she might not survive she induced him to yield to what she urged might be the last request she would

INSECT PEST OF MILLERS.

Over Forty Varieties of Moths and Beetles Bother Them.

"Millers have a good deal to contend with in modern times," said A. H. Hull of Kansas City, in the Milwaukee Free Press. "More than forty species of destructive moths and beetles infest granaries, some of which were only recently imported and some have been known as an enemy of stored grain ever since very ancient times. It takes a keen eye to detect in apparently sound wheat the presence of a 'granary weevil,' but if the grains have been stung by it, incalculable injury may be done in a short time. Another destructive insect that infests mills is the flour moth, known as the scourge of the flour mill. These insects excel in web-spinning, and sometimes mix up so much with the grain that the machinery is clogged and mills are stopped for long periods. "The Indian meal moth excels in devouring the germs of wheat, injuring it for seed. A flat little beetle called the 'four weevil' often makes its appearance in flour after it has been barreled or bagged. They are the worst pests in the milling world that I can think of now, and I sometimes wonder that the American public is blessed with such excellent flour in the face of all this insect opposition."

Her Plan to Save.

The two women were talking about children's parties. "Yes," said the visitor, "I'm going to give Willie a party next week. About twenty-five children will be there. How much ice cream do you think I'll need?" "You won't need more than a gallon if you work a scheme I always use," replied the other woman. "When the children all reach the house I pass around some cookies—the yellow sugar kind. I let them eat all they want. They always eat so many that when the ice cream is served one small dish is enough for each child. Nothing works so well as the sugar cookies and they are easily and cheaply made. If you don't use this scheme you'll have to buy at least three gallons of ice cream for the twenty-five children."—Kansas City Star.

To See Stars in Daylight.

No Trouble at All, if You Followed Professor's Advice.

The astronomer, who was to lecture in the town hall, rested contentedly after his noonday meal. His peace of mind, however, was soon disturbed by the reception committee, who had called to make the day pleasant for him. This committee was handicapped by having on its membership a young man of the impressionistic class. He would talk deliberately and persistently on some deep subject; give utterance to long and complicated sentences, sprinkled with still longer words, and then conclude his unwieldy effort by convincing his hearers that he had said absolutely nothing.

ever make of him. And when she had recovered from the operation she went over to Bournemouth and herself gave away the bride. There was none other of Prince Oscar's relations present.

In a rose-covered house on the south coast the happy couple have lived since that day, occasionally visiting their native land, but making England their real home. Their boys go to English schools and they live the quiet life of English country gentlemen. Of course, when he married, the prince renounced his royal rights and all prospects of succeeding to the throne. The king granted him the title of Prince Bernadotte; and the Duke of Luxembourg, head of Queen Sophie's family, more recently created him Count of Wisborg, but it is little he cares for such dignities. He has never regretted cutting adrift from the throne, and Prince Bernadotte has long been satisfied that it was no sacrifice after all he made to marry her. The Norwegians would be glad to have him as their new monarch, but he has no desire to assume the responsibilities of a crowned head. Of stalwart figure, tall almost as his father, with clear, earnest eyes and a noble bearing, he would attract attention anywhere and in no company would he appear to greater advantage than in one composed of the scions of royalty. The princess has lost much of the beauty that first won his admiration, but she has gained the crown which only rests on the brows of happy wives and mothers, and his devotion to her is as fervid as ever.

He did not attend the royal wedding of his nephew, nor did his wife. His younger brother, Prince Eugene, was there, but as soon as the grand function was over he lost no time in making his way to the rose-clad house. Prince Eugene is still a bachelor. It is said he has declared that a bachelor he will remain unless fate brings in his way another woman like she who was Miss Ebba de Munck.

Handel in a Passion. Handel was once conducting one of his own oratorios, at Carlton, before the Prince and Princess of Wales and a distinguished company. Certain maids of honor began to chatter, whereupon Handel, throwing down his baton viciously shook his fist at the fault ones, reviling them in terrible-sounding German. The Princess whispered: "Hush! hush! Handel is in a passion!" And there was silence.

STRONGER THAN MEAT.

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired a judicial turn of mind from experience on the bench out in the Sunflower State, writes a carefully considered opinion as to the value of Grape-Nuts as food. He says:

"For the past 5 years Grape-Nuts has been a prominent feature in our bill of fare.

"The crisp food with the delicious, nutty flavor has become an indispensable necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful and beneficial, and has enabled us to practically abolish pastry and pies from our table, for the children prefer Grape-Nuts and do not crave rich and unwholesome food.

"Grape-Nuts keeps us all in perfect physical condition—as a preventive of disease it is beyond value. I have been particularly impressed by the beneficial effects of Grape-Nuts when used by ladies who are troubled with face blemishes, skin eruptions, etc. It clears up the complexion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my experience is that one small dish of Grape-Nuts is superior to a pound of meat for breakfast, which is an important consideration for anyone. It satisfies the appetite and strengthens the power of resisting fatigue, while its use involves none of the disagreeable consequences that sometimes follow a meat breakfast." GULF STREAM CHANGING ITS COURSE

Reports from many sea captains tell of encountering the Gulf stream in unexpected places. One master says the ocean river is as far north now as it was south during last winter for a time. He passed through it twenty miles from Nantucket Lightship. The dotted lines show the course as it is now and how close it is to the Atlantic coast. The continuous lines show the customary path.
