A. P. LEE, Mgr.

I AM the lad that makes you glad. When I am late you're awful mad. You make things hum and say, "By gum, why don't that pesky paper come?" You know you do, but if you knew how tough it is the whole year through to buck the line in rain or shine you'd say, "That boy's a friend of mine." I am your friend, year's end to end, and, hoping this may not offend, I beg to say it's New Year's day and turn about, you know, 's fair play. Be good to me and you will see I'll practice reciprocity. Don't miss that word. 'Tis one I heard election time. It is a bird. It means you've got my tender spot and henceforth I'll be on the dot. Though rains may pour and blizzards roar, I'll be on time forevermore.

AT break of day I'm on my way, while other folks are in the hay. I have my eyes upon the prize that makes men healthy, wealthy, wise. I can affirm I have the germ of early birds that catch the worm. I'm on the run before the sun has got his coat and trousers on. The dewdrop's gem that decks the hem of Night I see at 4 a. m. The hens that scratch the garden patch, I'm up before them all to snatch a bite and chase my 'papes' a race before the Day has washed her face. Of afternoons I whistle tunes as I distribute daily boons of joy and mirth and news whose girth takes in the annals of the earth, the page whose plan holds one day's span from out the history of man.

I'M on the street in hail and sleet, in winter's cold and summer's heat. I'm on the go through slush and snow, when thunders crash or tempests blow. Thus I divest myself of rest and for a pittance, at the best, to bring to you the story new of what your brothers think and do. Through sea and air the currents bear the tidings out of everywhere. O'er bound and bar, from near and far, they waft the tale of things that are. Like bees, they store from every shore the news of progress, peace and war, and you receive this feast they leave before you every morn and eve. The presses tell life's chronicle. I, as their herald, wish you well. Your newsboy small gives with this call a happy New Year to you all!
