Miss Katherine Henry is the name of a pretty Connecticut school ma'am (we suppose she is pretty, all school ma'ams are), who made a novel wager with a member of her school board. She believes Roosevelt will be elected president. If he is not, she agrees to wear white hose all winter; if he is elected, the school board member must wear a straw hat till next spring. "The trouble is," says Doc Bixby of the State Journal, "if she loses he will never know whether she carries out her part of the contract or not, and it serves him right."
