POPULAR TALKS ON LAW

By Walter K. Towers, A. B., J. D., of the Michigan Bar

WHEN YOU BUY A TICKET TO THE THEATRE

If you desire to ride to the next town and possess the wherewithal to purchase a ticket, the railroad company is bound to sell you the ticket, and having sold the ticket must allow you to enter its trains and ride to your destination, unless you chance to be in such a condition that it is not proper that you should ride with other passengers. If you wish to send a telegram the telegraph company has no option but to send it if you are able to pay and it is a proper message. This is because these enterprises are public in their nature and all of the public must be served without discrimination. But the owner of a place of amusement is in a different position. One might readily suppose that the theatre is public in its service, as is the railroad or telegraph, but before the law it stands in a different position. The rights of the theatre owner in dealing with those who come to his place of amusement are rather favorable. He stands more upon the plane of the merchant engaged in a private enterprise, who may sell or refuse to sell to whom he will.

"The manager or proprietor of a theatre," said a New York judge, "has the right to say who shall enter his place of entertainment and who shall not, or what class of people shall be entitled to do so, and what class shall not. This necessarily follows from the fact that his enterprise is a private one, and not public and because, while he may entertain the public at large, if he sees fit, he is under no obligation to do so."

In the case from which the foregoing opinion was quoted a leading dramatic critic in New York city had been excluded from certain theatres by the managements, and the court sustained the rights of the managers to refuse admission to whomsoever they chose for whatever reasons. Thus, in general, a theatre proprietor, before the law, is held to be engaged in purely private enterprise which he may conduct as he sees fit. He may cancel performances at his pleasure.

The view of the law is that the sale of a theatre ticket by a theatre is the issuance of a mere license to attend a performance, and this license may be revoked by the management. Even after the holder of a ticket has been admitted to the theatre, but before he has taken his seat, the management may revoke the license and require that the holder of the ticket leave the theatre. If he refuses he may be lawfully ejected, provided no more than necessary force is used. The holder of the ticket who is refused admission may only recover the cost of his ticket and such expenses as he was put to in reaching the theatre. In other words, his direct financial loss. In a few cases, where a patron was ejected without adequate reason, damages were allowed for the insult offered, but this is not generally done, especially where the management had any reason for revoking the right to attend the performance which the ticket holder has purchased.

If, through a mistake, a patron is given a ticket calling for the wrong seat or gets into the wrong seat, he may be required to change to another seat, and if he resists and causes a disturbance he may be forcibly removed. Unless he becomes disorderly, however, he may not be ejected from the theatre.

While a theatre is a private enterprise, the state may, nevertheless, exercise a wide degree of control. It may censor the entertainment offered through proper officials. Thus a moving picture house may be required to show its films before an official censor and secure his approval before displaying them to the public. Sunday performances may be prohibited, safety and sanitation insisted upon, etc., etc.

In some states the legislatures have regulated the right of a theatre to refuse to sell tickets to whom it will. In such states the rights of the theatre goers are increased by the privileges and rights granted by special law. In not a few states this legislation has been aimed to prevent any discrimination against negroes, and where state legislatures have so acted the courts have enforced these laws. Illinois, for instance, has specifically enacted that no theatre may deny admission to anyone because of race or color, or bar them from any class of seats. Where such a statute exists, the theatre management no longer has the broad right of refusing admission to whom it will, which was spoken of above.

The activity of the ticket speculator is a phase of this question that is of no little importance to the theatre-going public. Law makers and theatre managers have endeavored in efforts to stamp out this evil, yet not with complete success. That the judges have not all looked upon ticket speculation as an evil is shown by the following quotation from a judicial opinion:

"The sale of a theatre ticket at an advance upon the original purchase price, or the business of reselling such tickets at a profit, is no more immoral or injurious to public welfare or convenience, than is the sale of an ordinary article of merchandise at a profit. It does not injure the proprietor of the theatre; he must necessarily have parted with the ticket at his own price and upon his own terms. It does not injure the second buyer; he must have had the same opportunity as the first buyer to purchase a similar ticket, and no greater right thereto; and having neglected that opportunity, or being unwilling to undergo the necessary inconvenience, and willing to pay a higher price rather than forego the privilege which the other by his greater diligence and effort has obtained, the transaction is just so far as he is concerned. The fact that such tickets are obtained and resold at an advance does not compel the manager of the theatre to put the tickets upon the same plane as ordinary merchandise. He can make them non-transferable, and place in the contract of sale any conditions necessary for the protection of himself or his patrons, and by printing such conditions on the tickets, he can prevent their resale to innocent buyers."

As the Judge points out, the theatre management may make their tickets non-transferable, and by refusing admission to a second purchaser prevent any resale of tickets. If the attention of the purchaser is drawn to such conditions, by signs in the theatre lobby and a notice printed on the tickets, such conditions may be enforced against him.

The theatre management owes to its patrons the duty of seeing that the premises are in a reasonably safe condition. It is bound to see to it that the building and all the fittings and appliances are in proper condition for public use. If any injury occurs to a patron which was due to a failure on the part of the management to keep the theatre in proper condition, the person injured may recover in damages.

While theatres have been here generally referred to, it is to be noted that all places of public amusement fall within the same rules of law. The circus, the museum, the picture show are all in the same class with theatres, in viewpoint of the law for all ordinary purposes. (Copyright, 1913, by W. K. Towers)

SUCCESSFUL IN BASIN

The following clipping from The Big Horn County Rustler of August 22nd, regarding Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Dismar, formerly of Alliance, but now at Basin, Wyoming, shows that they are succeeding in their new location:

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dismar of the Basin Delicatessen have just completed the work of thoroughly renovating the fine room in which their bakery is located. The room has been repainted and decorated, making a decided improvement in its appearance and adding greatly to the general movement toward sanitation. The proprietors of the Delicatessen have also promptly complied with the provision of the pure food law which requires that all bread shall be wrapped before leaving the bakery. Each loaf is now wrapped in paper before it is brought into the salesroom.

A TRUE DISCIPLE OF ROOSEVELT

J. J. Burke, of Columbus, who owns land in Box Butte county and who was here the first of the week, is a believer in the Roosevelt doctrines, but he says the following, taken from an eastern newspaper, is the best he has seen for a long time:

Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 23.—The home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Trueman in Ballington street has been invaded for several days by women, chiefly mothers, to congratulate them, and to get a look at the largest and handsomest baby in the city.

Minnie Louise is the latest addition to the family of the Trueman, and the day of her birth she weighed twenty-six pounds. She is the fourteenth child in the family and has grown wonderfully in the short time that she has been in the world. She has five sisters and four brothers living.

A doctor is a stranger to the Trueman household. There has been no call for medical aid by a physician since the second child was born.

Mr. and Mrs. Trueman have been married twenty-five years.
