Nature is such a natural and unpresumptuous wonder worker that we hardly seem impressed by the miracles that she performs right under our eyes. I have in mind especially now

Within a few months I have put on ten pounds in weight. This result in spite of the fact that for the past six years I have been under weight and never put on a pound, although I dieted and slept sufficiently at all times.

My late increase in weight and improvement in health were obtained through deep breathing, full relaxation and full contraction exercise, under competent direction, which is really the natural way for the body to get these things, and was the everyday way, before we were perverted through our sedentary habits and tense, fast living.

But my improvements were insignificant when compared to other men who were in worse condition than myself to start with. I know of a large number of men who have, through these same methods, been relieved of their nervousness, insomnia, obesity, constipation, headaches, rheumatism, anemia and almost every affliction in materia medica. I have often seen men who were run down to the verge of nervous prostration built Land Office at Alliance, Nebraska up to robust health and strength.

If some physician were to procure such results by his prescription the achievement would be the talk of the town, but when nature works these wondrous results we accept them as a matter of fact and think nothing of it.
