WM. H. SMITH OF SEWARD
Candidate for State Auditor
By Horace M. Davis, Editor Ord Journal.

Born in Henry county, Illinois, on November 20, 1873, Wm. H. Smith may claim to be a farmer, because his father was a farmer. In 1881 Mr. Smith moved his family to Cedar county, Iowa, but in the same year death claimed him and at eight years old Will was an orphan. He managed to get a common school education, but instead of taking a college course he secured a job as printer's devil on the Tipton Conservative. Here he remained until the fall of 1892, when he came over to Nebraska and worked for a time on the Hebron Register. He soon returned to Tipton and finished his trade, but came back to Nebraska again in February, 1897, and purchased a newspaper at Seward.

All of this sounds like an obituary, doesn't it? Call it what you want to but it is a story of the early life of one of Nebraska's live ones. There are many heart throbs that could be written into the boyhood history of a lad whose father died almost before the little fellow had learned to lap his name, but Will Smith is not the sort of a man who appeals to strangers through sentiment or sympathy.

After the memorable Bryan campaign of '96, when the eyes of the nation had been fixed on Nebraska's candidate for the presidency, Mr. Smith decided to cast his lot in this state. He had carried away a favorable impression of Nebraska when he returned to Iowa in 1892. So he advertised in the World-Herald for a location to engage in the newspaper business and as a result investigated Falls City, Harrison and Seward. The latter place was selected and here he has remained ever since as the publisher of the Seward Independent-Democrat.

It has been my good fortune to know Will Smith as a fellow publisher for as many years as he and I have been in the business of printing newspapers. More than that, we have worked together politically. When he was selected Secretary of the Senate in 1909 I served as first assistant. When he officiated in the same capacity in the next legislature and again as a member of the state senate in 1913, I was similarly serving in the other branch of the legislature. I know what I am talking about when I say that the state never had a more competent and faithful servant.

His first attempt for an elective office was in 1912 when he filed for the state senate. Seward county is about evenly divided between the democrats and republicans normally, but he walked into Butler county with a majority of 741. At the recent Nebraska primary election he was accorded the nomination for state auditor by a unanimous vote, no one filing against him on the democratic or people's independent tickets.

Mr. Smith has been actively interested in the educational work of county fairs and has been elected and re-elected secretary of the Seward County Agricultural society year after year. He has also been the secretary of the Nebraska Association of Fair Managers since the organization of the society in 1910.

It will be remembered that the city of Seward was visited by a devastating tornado in May, 1913. To assist the suffering poor people a commission was appointed to solicit and distribute aid. Mr. Smith was a member of the commission and contributed his share to the particularly satisfactory manner in which the distribution was effected.

Mr. Smith introduced in the 1913 legislature the bill, which afterward became a law, providing for a tax upon the business of express companies. The corporations fought it but he got the bill through and as a result the state collected $19,880.16 the same year.

Senator Smith also secured the passage of the bill providing for uniform bridge plans. Here he was opposed by the bridge trust, but he successfully overcome the efforts of the organized lobby and the law is now on the statute books and results yearly in saving to individual counties much more than the salary of any state officer.

The Smith family is a big one, and there are people of that name in every town and county in Nebraska. Of course they will all vote for William H. and if they do— But, thoughtful voter, whether your name be Smith or not, just bear in mind that Wm. H. Smith of Seward is thoroughly reliable, is a better business man than a politician and at all times a good consistent democrat with devoted admiration for President Wilson and his policies.

After the election two years ago "Doc" Bixby in the State Journal said: "Wm. H. Smith was successful in the twelfth senatorial district by a very flattering majority, and he has the good grace to come back at those who elected him with a published letter of thanks to those who voted for him and even to the school children who had no votes but who hurried for him during the campaign. This sort of thing is so unique as to deserve mention. The ordinary politician who meets success at the polls straightaway becomes chesty and if he speaks to you at all does so with an air of condescension that chills you like a breath of winter."
