AS TO TYPESETTING MACHINES

A number of The Herald's friends in Alliance have been somewhat agitated within the last few days by a statement published in another paper, to the effect that a court injunction for infringement of patent would probably make it necessary for users of the Intertype to discontinue with the machine. To allay their fears and at the same time give our readers information regarding typesetting machines that will interest them, we make the following explanation:

There are several different kinds of so-called typesetting machines, such as the Monotype, the Unitype, the Linotype, and the Intertype. We say "so-called" for the reason that some of them do not really set the type but cast slugs from melted metal that are used the same as type after it has been set into lines.

The Monotype is well adapted for the use of those offices that do job printing exclusively, but is not as well adapted to newspaper work, or a combination of newspaper and job printing work, as some of the others. It casts the type in lines from melted metal. We know of no Monotype machines in use outside of large job printing establishments.

The Unitype is the only one of the machines named that really "sets" the type, which has been previously placed in it. It is not much used, as it cannot compete with some of the other machines in speed.

The Linotype, manufactured by the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, is a slug casting machine. It contains a matrix, or rather a number of matrices, for each letter, figure and other mark used in printing. By means of a keyboard in a line, which is then shifted to a position adjoining the metal pot, where, in conjunction with a metal plate, the type matrices (or "mats" as printers call them) form a mould for the casting of a line of type (lin-o'-type), which when cast is in one piece, called a "slug."

The Intertype, manufactured by the International Typesetting Machine Company, is the latest of the typesetting machines that have come into prominence. The description of the Linotype applies in a general way to the Intertype. The Intertype makes use of the best features of the Linotype, with some improvements. The manufacture of the Intertype was commenced about three years ago. It sprang into popularity among printers and publishers almost immediately. After careful investigation, the Herald Publishing Company decided that it was the best machine for a combined newspaper and job printing office. A year ago an Intertype was placed in our mechanical department, taking the place of a "Junior" Linotype then in use. Since installing the Intertype, there has not been a day that we have not had reason for being glad that we selected it. It has given perfect satisfaction.

Now as to the controversy between the manufacturers of the Linotype and the Intertype, the latter machine is rapidly supplanting the former. In order to deter printers from purchasing the Intertype, the manufacturers of the Linotype have threatened suit for damages for infringement of patent, against users as well as manufacturers of the Intertype. For that reason the Herald Publishing Co. hesitated about purchasing an Intertype, altho believing it to be the best machine for our purpose. However, with a contract indemnifying us against damages from any such suit, and with such a man as Herman Ridder, the well known New York capitalist, former treasurer of the democratic national committee, at the head of the International Typesetting Machine Co., we ordered the machine that we preferred.

The Alliance Herald has the honor of having installed the first Intertype in Nebraska, altho a simultaneous shipment was made to the Omaha World-Herald, its machines being set up a few days later. Since then many Intertypes have been shipped into the state. One of the latest installations is that of the Nebraska State Journal at Lincoln this week, as will be seen by the clipping from that paper published in the lower right hand corner of first page of this paper. The Journal requires a plant of twelve machines. All of the Linotypes are being thrown out, the entire new plant consisting of Intertypes.

TEN YEARS AGO

From the Files of The Alliance Herald of January 20, 1905

The county Farmers' Institute was held Tuesday afternoon at the opera house. C. S. Reed presided. A permanent organization was effected in the afternoon, with E. C. Reed, president; J. R. Van Boskirk, vice president; W. E. Spencer, secretary-treasurer.

A. F. Mollring, a former Alliance city official who moved to Newcastle, Wyo., a year ago, died Saturday, January 14, 1905. The funeral was held at Nebraska City. He leaves four sons, Fred and Ed of Alliance, George of Newcastle, and Harry of Nebraska City.

Mayor Bowman issued an order Wednesday for the removal of all roulette wheels and gambling devices of whatever nature. Marshall Cardwell served the order and owners of gaming devices promptly complied with the order.

Dispatches from Washington state that the big government irrigation project for the North Platte valley will be put through. Work is expected to start in a few weeks.

Thursday evening of last week the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Zebrung on the east side was the scene of much merriment, the occasion being the celebration of Mr. Zebrung's birthday, he being forty years of age.

On February 14 the government threw open to entry under the Kin-kaid act 400,800 acres of land located in Lincoln, Keith and McPherson counties. The strip in which this land is located is 66 miles long and from 7 to 24 miles wide.

Card of Thanks

We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to our kind friends and neighbors who assisted us during the brief illness and death of our loved one Kenneth Edwin, also for the many floral offerings. May God deal kindly with them all.

Vegetables Grown in Greenhouse

The space in E. W. Ray's greenhouse not occupied by two beds of carnations and potted plants has been planted to radishes and lettuce, and thus good use is made of all the space it affords. As the vegetables now growing are marketed, seed will be planted for plants to transplant in the spring.

Woman's Club Donates Books

The Alliance Woman's Club has done much to make the city library the credit to Alliance that it is. Their latest boost for the library is a donation of $25 for the purchase of juvenile books, made a few days ago.
