

The WEEK'S DOINGS

as he was one of the pioneers of this section. He homesteaded a part of what is now the C. L. Powell farm, about two miles from Alliance. The Fowle family left here a good many years ago but later returned to Sioux county where they farmed for a couple of years. The knowledge that Walter Fowle has made good is welcome news to those who know him when a lad in Box Butte county.

Judging from appearances it isn't so hard to fool some of the people at least part of the time. The writer was out running down a news item this morning. He found it necessary or convenient to go into one of the thirt quenching emporiums that have replaced the saloons in Alliance. There was an elderly gentleman, probably a farmer or ranchman, and the statement is made with due respect to all concerned. He had wandered into the emporium and was busy putting away a scoup of the kind of suds they were dispensing there. It looked like beer—the same color and there was absolutely no drop of alcohol in it. The gentleman downing the suds ordered up another scoup. He winked. Then he ordered another. He thought he was putting something over. Those who had congregated there were "wise" and proceeded to help the visitor get a beer stew from liquid that contained not one drop of alcohol. After devouring a number of big glasses the visitor departed to await the action of the suds. Possibly he imagines he got the real stuff and it would not be surprising to hear it reported that Alliance was still in the business.

The city jail in the city hall has been ordered moved from the rear of the basement, where it has been for so long, to the front room in the basement, at one time used as the office for the police judge. This will make the jail lighter, and more easily cleaned. The old jail has been in a dark room by the side of the furnace gets good and hot and there are several prisoners locked up, the odors are something fierce. If for no other reason than for a sanitary one, the change is a good one.

J. L. Nicolai and son turned out a job from their auto repair and machine shop this week that usually goes to the larger cities. A Box Butte county farmer who had just purchased a new Rock Island tractor for farm and plowing use neglected to run the water out when quitting work at night, with the result that the water jackets on all four cylinders froze and burst. The cylinders were in bad shape and the owner was considering ordering new parts but hated to wait several days or weeks for them at this time of the year, when every minute counts with the farmer. Mr. Nicolai welded the hursted water jackets in two days by using his Oxy-Acetelene welding outfit at a cost of one-fourth the price of new parts. Much work which was formerly sent away is now being done by this firm with their complete machine and repair shop.
