The Gossip Say—

—By— ADAM LIAR

'Aint It the Truth
Mind you, I don't know how true this is—I didn't see it happen myself—but 'twas told to me, as the gossops say: They were "at it" in one of the billiard emporiums of the city. They got to going strong. Finally each wrote a check for $25 and put it up with the clerk. They flipped a dime at a crack in the floor. B. B. shot, and won. Then A. B. went home and explained to his wife "how it happened." Then a bystander remarked, referring to the winner, "Just as lucky as his dad." Aint it the truth, boys.

Try This on Your Friend
"Did you see all those soldiers guarding the city library?"
"No. Why in the world have they been guarding the library?"
"Why they found dynamite in the dictionary."
Ouch. Outside Bum.

Sure, I Admit It
One of the regular readers of this Liar's Column said to me yesterday, "How d'yo utthink of all that stuff." Listen, sweetheart, yours truly don't think of it. Sometimes someone "told it to me," sometimes I see it myself, and sometimes I just naturally swipe it.

I Wonder, Too
Which calls to my mind an instance when I swiped a mule. Remember when you used to go to school they told you there were several essential points to a fact and that these essential points were, "What, when and where?" Well—

Helped Out by Fate
One of Alliance's well-known young men who is proud of the fact that he is married, replied in answer to the question, "How did you come to make the choice,"

"It was superstition that made me marry my wife. It was a toss-up between her and Mary. One day I was thinking which one to have—Mary or Anna—when I saw a cigar on the ground. I picked it up, and I'm blessed if it didn't say on it, 'Havana,' so I took her.

It Pays to Advertise
Will the man who spat in my eye last night kindly tell me what kind of tobacco he was chewing, as I want to get some of the same?"

May Be Shorter Now
An Alliance matron who recently made a trip to Scottsbluff states that she knows the exact distance between these two points. It is exactly 68 beer bottles. Count 'em.

Just a Tip for You
That calls to mind the experience of one of Alliance's young bucks, who loaned his shoes to "His Nibs" in order to escape opening the gates.

Let It "Soak" in
My, how times have changed. They've got a new table of liquid measure now. It goes like this:
4 gills make 1 pint.
2 pints make 1 quart.
4 quarts make 1 tight.

Not that Kind of Girl
There was need for conversation. "What do you think of those new Turkish atrocities?" he asked. "I'll have you understand that I never smoke cigarettes," she replied.

Some Figuring
Willie—Let's take a walk to Berea.
Eugene—What, ten miles?
Willie—Well, that's only five miles apiece.

Johnny on Linotypes
This was handed in. It may be stolen, but it's good, just the same: A linotype is a machine at fixed letters for printing. A feller at runs such an outfit is called a pacifist or a liner or some such something. It looks like a binder with the platform and canvass off. When running it sounds like nails running through a corn sheller. The pacifist sets on a chair and punches little red, white and blue buttons, and—great gobs of goose gravy—how things do rattle. Little gill-firts fly in every direction. Every once in a while a long arm comes down and picks up a lot of little ding-prods and takes them up and shoves them onto a rig-a-ma-jig which carries them over and drops them down into batch hatches, then they go through again. When the liner pushes a button it makes that letter of boiling lead and when enough letters are made to form a word and enough words to form a line, it pushes them off on a shelf. Enough good lead is used every day to kill every German on a submarine. A feller at can shoot lead into letters ought to be able to shoot 'em into Germans, but I guess I think it ain't quite so dangerous.

The liner told me he used to set all that type by hand before the linotype came into style. I bet his fingers got hot often. Every once in a while a bell rings and then the liner has to back up and circle to the right or he would run off the platform. There is a nother feller in the office at can't run it so he has to set type by hand. He's learning though. I bet I'd learn, too. If the liner had to go to war, then one couldn't run the critter and we'd have to read cold type. I'll bet a feller at can run a linotype could run a flying machine.

Triumphantly yours,
JOHNNY CAKE.
