NEWS SERVICE SLIPPED A COG.

The "matchless bulletin service" of The Herald's esteemed contemporary in Alliance slipped a cog the first of the week with the result that the editor was compelled to "explain" in his usual masterful style—he threw the blame on the shoulders of someone—he don't know whom.

By means of its "wireless" the contemporary gathered from the starry heavens the information that the entire German army had been captured at one fell swoop. With lightning like rapidity special bulletins in bright red ink were printed and spread broadcast to the public telling of this miracle, for it would have taken a miracle to accomplish this impossible feat. As news-hungry crowds gathered about the red-ink-bulletins they wondered at the fact that Alliance had within its borders such an unparalleled news-distributing organization, headed by the gentleman who found the phrase "apuros versenkt" so useful in past history.

But alas, alas, alas. 'Tis the firing squad now if the culprit who scattered upon the ether the unfaithful news is found, for 'twas but a rumor-roum. And the contemporary, "faithful even unto death" withdraws its faithful pen from its scabbard and in lines of blood-red ink explained as follows:

"The man who would wilfully start such a report as was sent over the wires onday concerning the capture of the entire German army on the west should be placed with his back against a brick wall and be made a target for sharpshooters and bait for buzzards.

"To deliberately concoct a yarn of that magnitude is distinctly pro-German and when it comes across the continent with all the appearance of being official there should be some trace of its origin. The country will not be wholly safe so long as men of that calibre are alive and unchained. To fail to make an effort to trace such stories were to fall in the first principles of defense. And to fail to make an object lesson of such a pitiable liar were to fall in the true spirit of America as it is being exemplified daily by the men who die at the front in France.

"Such things are started in the form of jokes, but when they are ticked across thenation on telegraph wires they cease to be jokes and join the ranks of treasonable acts for which the penalty is death."

Dr. A. J. Daniels and Miss Viola A. Sharp were united in marriage on Wednesday, June 5, by County Judge Ira Tash. The young people will make their home in Alliance.

A theater party is to be given tonight in honor of Misses Hazel Thompson and Lucille Fawcett, who leave Friday night to attend school at Lincoln. A dainty luncheon will be served at the ice cream parlor after the show.
