Don't neglect to cast a favorable vote for the school bonds at next Friday's election. The board is asking for authority to issue $250,000 in bonds for the purpose of building and equipping two new buildings, one a high school and the other a ward school to be situated in the east part of the city. There have been all sorts of rumors floating about the city—one to the effect that the board cannot build two buildings at the present high prices, and that means that the ward school will be overlooked. The board is composed of sensible business men and women who know what building expense is justified. They will not go ahead, they have announced, and build unless it seems probable that lowered costs will make it profitable for them to do so. However, the election has been called—and elections are expensive. Show your trust in those you have elected on the school board, give them authority to act for you, and thereby save a delay in the school building program and the expense of another election.

The war department is about ready, it is announced, to begin rounding up the draft dodgers. In addition to the big number who received exemption, there were 174,000 who "took to the tall timber of peace at any price." The system that will be adopted is the only one that will work—pitiless publicity. These draft-dodgers have all been classified as to states, counties and towns, and when the department is ready, these lists will be given to every newspaper in the area affected. From that minute on, the easiest way will be for the d. d. (the last two letters stand for "draft dodger" and you are at liberty to guess the identity of the first) to surrender at the nearest military post and take his medicine. Pending publication of the list, any dodger may surrender and avoid the publicity feature of the punishment, but it will be unsafe for those who hold out to hang around home or any place where they are known.

A Chadron newspaper publishes figures to show that J. Rayburn, who came to that place as city manager twenty-seven days ago, has saved the city over one-fourth the amount of his yearly salary of $5,000 already. There is almost civil war in Chadron, due to the efforts of the mayor to reserve all the authority to himself and make an expensive figurehead of Rayburn, who doesn't seem to be built of figurehead material. Already it has been suggested that an election be called to settle the question of who should resign—the mayor or the city manager—and that is probably the easiest way out. The Chadron manager has a number of strong friends, and likewise a few healthy enemies, and friends of the system are watching the outcome with interest. Alliance needs a city manager, but unless there is some way to combine the office with that of mayor, it's a good thing to let it alone. Any other combination will not be likely to work out.

A Suitable Song
I cannot wear the old suit
I wore long years ago;
It's shiny at the shoulders,
My knees and elbows show.
But on investigation I
Discover this is true:
I cannot wear the old suit,
Nor can I buy a new.
