EXPENSIVE EGGS
 By ELLEN KEE.

 Jean "shoned" the last of her white Leghorns down the runway and into the hen house.
 "Come Scooter, come Fluster, here Speckles," she called and heaved a sigh of relief when the last one was safely locked in the hen house.
 Then she went indoors to arrange her basket and get dressed. At the other end of the town was an exclusive club for whose members Jean each day supplied fresh eggs.
 "If my Leghorns will only keep up their good work," she mused as she dressed, "at the present price of eggs I shall soon have enough to pay for my whole term at art school next year," and she pulled the fleecy cap down over her lovely brown hair.
 "Wonder what the new owner will be like," she mused as she walked along. "Perhaps he will be too high and mighty to buy eggs from a little country girl, although goodness knows, they're expensive enough."
 Arrived at her destination, Jean waited in the reception room for the manager, and chatted with some of the club members with whom she had become a great favorite.
 "I'm going to buy some of that black elder, Miss Jean," said one of the ladies.
 "Have you any left for me?" said a deep voice, and a pleasant faced young man whom Jean had noticed before, came forward with a smile.
 Jean pointed to her empty basket.
 "I should like to order some from you if I may," he said.
 Jean's practical mind at once welcomed a new "customer."
 "I can get you as large a bunch as you would like," she said.
 "Oh," said the young man, walking down the steps with her, "I will come for them at any time you say. You see," noticing the girl's surprised look, "I drive the machine for this club, and can easily stop at your place and get them. I am Keith Merrill—at your service"—and he smiled.
 "Ah," thought Jean, "a chauffeur. Well, at least we are fellow wage-earners."
 Promptly at the appointed hour he drove up to the modest little white cottage.
 "What a fine car," exclaimed Jean, frankly voicing her admiration. "I should think you would be proud to drive such a beauty."
 "Won't you let me give you a little ride?" said the young man. "I am free this evening—and I'll stop and get the elderberries on my way back."
 Jean hesitated a moment—but the temptation was so strong—so running into the house to tell Aunt Anne, she was back again in a moment and away they sped through the country roads on a never-to-be-forgotten ride.
 "Well, tomorrow will be my last day to take eggs up to the clubhouse," said Jean one evening as they were spinning along.
 "And pray why the last?" asked her companion with surprise in his voice, and Jean told him of her course at art school, interrupted by Aunt Alice's illness, and of her resolve to make her flock of Leghorns pay for her last year's tuition.
 "And then I can teach," she said, "and I've really been very fortunate, for I wanted to make the money before the new owner of the clubhouse came to take charge, and I've done it. I hear he's a very domineering, disagreeable sort of man."
 Her companion started. "Indeed," he remarked dryly.
 "Yes," said Jean, "and it's too bad, for Mr. Seton, the former owner, has always been so kind. Well, at any rate, I'm glad that I shan't have to meet the new man, for, after tomorrow, I shall have just enough for my tuition."
 "Has the season been a profitable one for you, so far?" she queried of her companion, suddenly realizing that he had vouchsafed very little information as to his own plans.
 Next morning Jean arrived at the clubhouse a little earlier than usual. None of the members were in sight.
 A bellboy met her at the door saying, "Oh, Miss Jean, the new owner wants to see you in the office."
 Jean's heart sank, but seeing no way out of it, she deposited her precious basket in a corner and went in. The office was deserted, so she sat down to wait. A door suddenly slammed behind her, and Jean turned around to gaze straight into the smiling face of "the man who drove the car for the clubhouse."
 "I'm waiting to see the new owner," said Jean, "is he as bad as they say?"
 "I'll leave that question for you to answer," said Merrill.
 "For me! Why, I haven't met him!" exclaimed the girl. "Where is he?"
 "Here," answered the young man, and he held out his hands. "Jean, dear, please forgive me—my name is Keith Merrill Harding, but I could not bear that you should know it until you had at least changed your opinion of him."
 "But—but—really—I—really—I don't see," faltered the girl, bewildered.
 "Love is always blind," said the man, persuasively.
 Jean flushed, but her eyes met his bravely. "You should order me away," she said, shyly, "the eggs I brought are 'much too expensive.'"
 "Indeed they are," he agreed gravely, "to me they are very, very dear." And he took her in his arms.
