Judge Gary of steel trust fame has been talking again—and on his favorite topic, the labor unions. "We do not combat labor unions as such," says the judge. "We, of course, acknowledge the natural right of labor to organize. We stand for the open shop, which permits a man to work when and where he pleases, on terms mutually agreed upon, whether he does or does not belong to the union. Our men generally do not belong to labor unions because they know by long experience it is to their advantage to be free from dictation by outsiders; that they are receiving as large, or larger compensation, and as good, or better conditions for themselves and their families as would be provided under labor union domination." All of this is highly amusing to those who know the conditions which prevailed in the steel mills before the laborers, by organizing, forced the first improvements. This fight for betterment was snatched and made by the union men alone, although their non-union brothers, who would not submit to "dictation by outsiders," were perfectly willing to accept a share of the benefits. Mr. Gary's statement, however, is interesting because it shows the trend of modern industry. Labor unions may be made unnecessary by giving the laborers their just deserts, for why pay dues to an organization that has nothing to fight for? This change of front on the part of the worst enemy of union labor is significant, for certainly the steel corporation tried the blackjack long enough before they took the kindness route.

But little real news drifts in from Germany these days. The newspapers carry dispatches of the latest political moves, but we learn very little of the Grotshens and Johans who were, a few months ago, bending their every energy to save the world to Germany. A recent editorial in Machinery gives the following picture of 1920 industrial conditions in the land from which the kaiser fled: "There has been a mental and moral collapse in Germany since the war. Life is viewed with indifference and it is as if the whole people suffered from a mental fever that must run its course. The attitude of the workers in industry is one of apathy. Living costs are 10 times what they were before the war. Food is scarce and food cards are still used. The attitude of labor and the shortage of raw material make the industrial situation bad. Strikes are the order of the day. Production per man is low. Coal, iron, steel and cotton are lacking. Transportation conditions are bad. Everything looks neglected—everything is permitted to run down shiftlessly. The uncertainty of the indemnity has something to do with this. There is a feeling that whatever is produced will go toward the indemnity."

Since the escape of the two convicts from the state road camp at Tecumseh, Governor McKelvie has announced that something of the sort was expected and that no change would be made in the honor system. All of which shows the governor to possess a broad point of view. It also indicates that until convicts appreciate privileges given them, it would be well to see that competent guards are hanging around in convenient places, so that those who are tempted to violate their pledges will have an opportunity to change their minds before they leave the honor camp too far behind. Since Governor McKelvie himself interviewed the men who were put on their honor, no wonder he refuses to admit that this judgment could have been wrong. Why on earth wasn't this left up to Warden Fenton, who knows criminals and who is in a position to sort out the trustworthy?

Opposition has developed to the plans of the meter-liter-gram enthusiasts, who seek to have congress enact legislation making the metric system compulsory throughout the United States. Strangely enough, this opposition, comes from a technical magazine, Power-Plant Engineering, which points out that such a change will entail considerable expense. Think of all the factories in the United States which are not using the English-French system, and compute the cost of changing shop tools, jigs, dies and other instruments over to conform to the requirements of another system. It's just about as sensible a stunt as forcing everyone in the United States to learn to speak Esperanto.

The United States is again faced with an immigration problem, following the war. Immigrants are coming in as fast as the ships will bring them. Already nearly six hundred thousand aliens have applied for permission to come to this country; during the past month the number has exceeded ten thousand weekly, and all records will be broken unless some restrictions are imposed. The problem, of course, is to decide whether all comers shall be admitted—and still a greater problem is their education and employment after arrival. Opinions differ on the subject. There are plenty of jobs for unskilled workers, especially in eastern factories and on western farms, to say nothing of the big road construction projects. Other countries are making a bid for immigrants, Argentina giving them free land, Brazil pays their passage and gives them free transportation to their work; Chile offers a hundred acres of land and an assortment of agricultural implements and New Zealand has arranged for reduced fares. The United States gets the bulk, without offering any particular inducement.

President Wilson has exercised the "pocket veto" on eleven bills passed during the closing days on congress, on the ground that they did not reach him in time for proper consideration. He found time, however, to approve fifty-eight, and some of those which he was unable to consider were most important. It seems strange that a politician would not take time, for instance, to approve a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee to confer with the Canadian government with regard to restrictions on pulp wood coming to the United States. With every newspaper paying robber prices for print paper, one would think that the leader of all the democrats would hardly care to slap the publicity interests of his country in the face.

It's no wonder marriage is a lottery when so many people even meet by chance.

In this day and age, the sooner the bride begins to cook, the sooner the honeymoon will bump the bumps.

Announcing Our Hours For Work

Believing that we are entitled to have a definite time during which we must work and be held responsible for the proper performance of our duties, and that outside these hours we cannot rightly be held accountable for accumulation of garbage, we make the following announcement.

Between 7 a. m. and 4 p. m.

we will take charge of refuse and waste matter covered in our contract. We cannot be held responsible for matter thrown away to be handled off by us after these hours.

It is necessary for us to make a trip to the dump grounds after 4 p. m., which takes us a full hour and a half.

With the co-operation of the public we can keep Alliance a model of cleanliness. Patrons are respectfully requested to arrange their cleaning so that it will be finished in time to permit us to haul it away, without the necessity of working twelve to eighteen hours every day.

See What A Bank Account Can Do For You

This is just one of the world of possibilities open to depositors in this bank. Anyone can do wonders with even a small account. A trip to the seashore, a trip to the mountains, an electric sweeper for the wife, new furniture for the house—an investment that will pay you money,—any of the number of things you wish to buy but feel the expense is too great.

The secret is this: Save now, a small amount at a time, while you have no special urge to spend the money. Then later, when you really want or need something, you will be in a position to have it. Sickness or unexpected financial difficulties will have no terrors for you.

You Can Do It If You Start—
Just Don't Stop

We will be glad to explain to you at any time how the plan works out—what interest you receive, in fact all about it.
