William H. James, arrested in Julesburg, Colo., on a charge of assaulting Harry Horton, farm laborer, at Hemingford with a hatchet during the course of a poker game, was released last Friday afternoon. The officers exerted every effort to get hold of Horton, but the man with the damaged head managed to keep out of sight. When the complaining witness decided that he didn't want a trial, the officers were not particularly desirous of going ahead without valuable evidence. James admitted that he used the hatchet, but his story was that it was in self-defense, when Horton drew a revolver.

Calude Davis, bound over to district court last week on a charge of carrying concealed weapons, and committed to jail in default of $100 bail, was given temporary liberty yesterday, and left for Lakeside with Frank Palmer, with whom he has accepted employment. Davis' parents in Mountain View, Mo., telegraphed the money necessary to secure his release. Young Davis has been playing hobo for some time. He is only a kid of twenty-six, and after he had been held up a couple of times by unscrupulous companions of the road, decided to buy a revolver to protect himself.
