

AT THE MOVIES

"Her Honor the Mayor," with Eileen Percy, a new Fox screen star, in the leading role, will be shown at the Imperial this evening. The play is based on the great Broadway success of the same name, and demonstrates that the hand that rocks the cradle can, if necessary, rule a city. Of course, there are a few plots and counterplots, and the young lady mayor falls in love with her political adversary, but it ought to be an interesting feature.

The Saturday bill is "The Price of Redemption," and the star is that fascinating gentleman, Bert Lytell. The central figure in this romance is Leigh Dering, a young English officer, who displays his bravery by bringing relief to a beleaguered English fort in the heart of tumultuous India when a native uprising takes place. He returns to London a hero; marries a rich girl for the sake of the position the alliance will give him and then discovers that he does not love her. One night his wife's father is slain by a woman whom he had wronged. Dering learns the perpetrator of the murder, and then, wishing to get away from his unhappiness, assumes the blame for the crime and returns to India. There, a hunted man, he sinks into the depths of degradation. A slave to drink and cocaine, he becomes an outcast until one day there is a great change. Inch by inch he fights his way back to honor and place and a good name.

Sunday comes Elaine Hammerstein in "The Point of View." This is a photoplay depicting the troubles caused a family by the maintenance of a bulwark of pride against the worldly troubles that beset them. Miss Hammerstein portrays the role of Marjory Thorncroft, who enters into a loveless marriage to further the ambitions of her violinist brother, who has dreams of being a king of the concert stage. After a year studying in Europe his first performance proves a frost, and then the storm breaks.

It's one of those bedroom farces, of course, but the fillum for next Monday is a pippin. The title is "A Shocking Night." William Harcourt, depicted by Lee Moran, is a young business man to whom fortune gives a surly glance just when he most needs money. He is trying to put up a good appearance before a rich man who is going to back him in a financial come-back, and his bankruptcy almost ruins the plans. How he and his bride play butler and maid while a pal and his fiancée play the role of host and hostess, gives the principals ample opportunity to get themselves into deliciously funny situations.

Chamber of Commerce Dues Are Deductible From Gross Incomes

The Alliance chamber of commerce secretary has received many inquiries from its members regarding the disposition in income tax returns of dues to commercial organizations. Secretary Corey has submitted the following self-explanatory letter from the commissioner of internal revenue, written to the editor of the Monthly Bulletin of the New York chamber of commerce, which will be of interest to many Alliance business men:

"Reference is made to your letter of January 27, 1920, in which you inquire whether dues paid by business and professional men to chambers of commerce are allowable deductions from gross income as business expenses. "In reply you are advised that this office holds that membership dues paid by taxpayers, either individuals or corporations, to chamber of commerce as a means of furthering their business interests may be claimed as a deduction in the return of income rendered for a year in which such dues are paid or accrued, according to the basis upon which the books of the taxpayer are kept."
