

RANDOM SHOTS

Peruna is again being advertised. In the good old days when Peruna was manufactured under the original formula, this would have been an indication that the bootleg hooch was bad indeed.

Flossie Feather, fourteen-year-old Lincoln girl, ran away from home to join a carnival. Now we see where the expression "feather-brained" might have originated.

Among other blessings may be recorded the fact that we do not live in Ireland. Over in that land of peace and plenty even funeral parties are not safe. One man was killed and three other injured near Belfast the other day, while burying a friend.

The unemployment problem cannot be solved by conferences any more than the writing of diplomatic notes will keep a country out of war. Jobs are what the jobless need—not bulletins giving accurate summaries of the causes why there are no jobs to be had.

"Romance of War Ends in Marriage," reads a headline in the Lincoln Star. Why should the headwriters always assume that the romance ends where marriage begins?

An Alliance man—getting along in years but with his sense of humor still intact—tells this one on himself. Night before last he retired either too early or too late, and his sleep was troubled. Worse than that, he had a nightmare, and a mean riding one, at that. He dreamed that he awoke to find a burglar in the house. For five or ten minutes he watched the fellow prow about, saw him collect the family silverware into a bag, and then the burglar's manner made him mad. Jumping out of bed (still a dream, you understand) he seized the intruder by the coat collar and proceeded to kick him where it would do the most good. He kicked long and forcefully—and he suddenly awakened in earnest, to find that his right foot was pinning him terribly. He looked at it—and found all five toes bleeding. He had been kicking the wall. Now he hobbles when he walks, and if you find a portly, gray-haired gentleman walking as though his corns bothered him a lot, you've found the hero of this tale.

This experience reminds us of another Alliance man who, on retiring, heard a burglar downstairs. He hastily awakened his wife and seizing her by the shoulders, pushed her out into the hall and started down the stairs, holding her in front of him, hostage-like. "Why," she protested, "why do you put me in front where it's dangerous? Maybe he'll shoot." "Darling," said the scared householder, with chattering teeth, "it's a mighty mean burglar who would shoot a woman."

A rancher strolled into the Model market and engaged Jones in conversation. "I wouldn't mind buying some bacon," he confessed, "if the price were right." "What did you pay for the last bacon you bought," inquired Jones. "Twenty-eight cents a pound," was the reply. "Well, I can beat that just 2 cents," said Jones. "I've got some good bacon here at 26 cents a pound." "I'll take a couple of slabs," said the rancher. "I like to trade where I get beat the most."

Dr. J. P. Weyrens Talks to the Alliance Lions at Thursday Luncheon

Dr. J. P. Weyrens of the Slagle clinic of this city spoke to the members of the Alliance Lions club at a regular luncheon Thursday noon on the subject of "Cancer," giving one of the most interesting and instructive talks which the club has ever been favored. Dr. Weyrens illustrated his talk with blackboard sketches illustrating his points.

Cancer, he said, is a breaking down of the bodily tissue at some point where it has been bruised. Ordinarily the body, when functioning properly, will replace broken down tissue with new cells. When a cancerous growth appears, it is due to the fact that the cells replacing those destroyed are immature and lacking in resistance, strength and stamina. Such cells, the speaker called "infant cells."

Dr. Weyrens said that while it was possible to explain what cancer is, it is more difficult to explain why it should develop. This "why" of cancer has never been satisfactorily answered, he declared, even though it has been found possible to cure the condition. A group of physicians and surgeons selected from all over the country, has investigated cancer for a number of years, and were compelled to confess themselves unable to explain why a cancerous growth should develop.

Positive cures for cancer were given by Dr. Weyrens, who said that all that was necessary was to remove the diseased tissue. The methods in use are surgery, X-ray or radium and cauterization by means of arsenic paste. The speaker favored surgery as the most satisfactory, the cleanest and surest way of dealing successfully with cancer. He impressed upon his hearers the fact that where there is a cancerous growth in the body, the diseased cells may be taken to other parts of the body through the blood or lymph tracts, and secondary cancers result.

Cancerous tissue must be removed, he said, before secondary cancers appear, otherwise treatment may remove only a part of the trouble. Arsenic paste is a sure means, he said, but is slow, for it takes a week or more to accomplish what surgery will accomplish in five minutes. The X-ray or radium treatment is successful, he declared, if undertaken by a careful operator, who will be sure that all the cancerous tissue is removed, and that none of the healthy tissue surrounding it is burned. Surgery he believed the best method of coping with the disease, for the treatment is swift, sure and clean. Unless the work of removal is thoroughly done, the cancer returns within a few years.

A number of out-of-town guests were entertained at luncheon. S. H. S. H. Townsend, manager of the Mutual Life Insurance company of New York; T. H. McWilliams, district superintendent of the company and Ed Marks of Alliance were guests of W. L. O'Keefe. B. Aufdengarten, rancher of Sunrise, Wyo., and J. E. Foreman, banker of Guernsey, Wyo., were guests of Lloyd C. Thomas, recently elected a member of the club, and E. H. Potter of the Standard Chautauqua system of Lincoln was another guest.

Mr. Townsend gave a short talk on the insurance business. He urged the Lions to consider the life insurance business as one of the most substantial in the country today. Among other things, he spoke of the immense sums of money controlled by these companies, most of which have offices in the east, and said that this money was often used to develop public enterprises, such as irrigation projects, railroad extensions, and the like.

Mr. Potter explained the various kinds of contracts written by the chautauqua company with the various towns, and the reason why the contract was considered necessary by the various systems.

Rules and Practices Governing Patients in City Pest House

The presence of an out-of-town patient in the city pest house has given rise to considerable discussion during the past two or three days, with the result that the city authorities have investigated the proposition. In this case, the patient pays all expenses, and there is no problem of deciding who is to pay the bill, but the discussion has brought out the need for a more general understanding of the rules governing certain cases for future guidance.

There was some complaint on the part of the attending physicians that the pest house was not in shape to receive patients from outside the city, short time after the patient had been brought to Alliance, necessary supplies were taken out there and a telephone installed. City officials take the stand that while they are willing to receive patients from outside the city, the city is not obligated to furnish quarters for them. In this case, the city officials say, no advance notice was given that the pest house was to be utilized.

Some time ago, during the administration of Mayor A. D. Rodgers, there was some talk of using the city pest house for contagious cases from all over the county, the county commissioners to pay necessary expenses for patients living outside the municipality. This was discussed at some length, but no formal agreement was ever entered into, according to City Attorney Metz.

The rules of the state board of health require that contagious diseases occurring in the city be reported to the city board of health within twenty-four hours, and outside of the municipality report is to be made within that time to the county board of health, such report to be made by the attending physician, the head of the family or the person in charge. For general information, the membership of both city and county health boards are given herewith:

City board of health—Mayor R. M. Hampton, chairman; Dr. J. P. Weyrens, physician; Chief of Police C. W. Jeffers, secretary and quarantine officer; S. W. Thompson and N. A. Kemmish.

W. Miller, chairman and quarantine officer; Dr. C. E. Slagle, physician; County Superintendent Opal Russell, secretary of the board.

The rules provide that the secretary is to be notified in each case.
